Proposes Council Partly Elective With Little Legislative Power.

REDMOND DEMANDS MORE

Irish Will Take All Can Get, but Try to Amend in House—Great Home Rule Demonstration by the Colonial Premiers.

LONDON, April 25.—Discussions are still going on between the government and John Redmond, chairman of the Irish Parliamentary party in the House of Commons, respecting the Irish bill which will be introduced in the House May 7. That there are wide differences between the government officials and the Irish Nationalists relative to the terms of the measure is not denied, but it has been agreed that the bill shall be introduced on the date determined upon by Secretary for Ireland Burrell, and that the Nationalists are unable to get from the Government they will endeavor to obtain by amendment, which will be proposed during the debate.

Far Short of Irish Demands.

Some of the Cabinet members who favor home rule were willing to concede many of the demands of the Irish party, but the majority favored a measure far short of what Mr. Redmond and his followers asked. There have been many conferences on the subject, and for a time it was feared that the introduction of the bill would have to be postponed, but the negotiations have now reached a stage at which it is possible to present the measure to the House.

While the negotiations were going on, those participating in them were reticent as to the provisions of the bill, but it can be stated broadly that it establishes an Irish Council, partly elective and partly nominative, which shall administer the domestic affairs of Ireland, exclusive of the army and navy, but will have little or no legislative powers.
