Hog Cholera at Astoria. ASTORIA, Or., May 5.—(Special.)—There is a species of hog cholera prevalent in this vicinity and during the past few days about 300 hogs, all of which were owned by Chinese vegetable gardeners have died with the disease.

YESTERDAY afternoon marked the debut of Miss Louise Kent as a leading woman. It was an auspicious occasion, and justified enthusiastic felicitations for Miss Kent, the management, and all the members of the company.

"The Cowboy and the Lady" was the offering, and a better all-round performance has never been given by the Baker Company.

For a first performance, yesterday's matinee was exceptionally smooth. Every member of the cast seemed perfect, and each worked with such confidence that it might have been a bill which they had been playing an entire season.

If Miss Kent was nervous the audience had no inkling of it. She was self-confident at all times, and acted with admirable restraint and reserve. Her once she did betray the fact that the occasion was in any way critical. It is no small undertaking for this young actress to wear the gorgeous gowns so long and creditably by Lillian Lawrence, who has left to accept an important Eastern engagement. The part of Mrs. Weston, in which she has been so early a triumph, is a difficult one, and a severe test. That Miss Kent arose to the occasion so well is greatly to her credit.

She was very favorably received, and the frequent and spontaneous applause of the audience testified their warm approval.

It has fallen to the lot of Edgar Baume to play a number of roles lately in which the most famous of authors have written. He followed Willie Collier's lead in "The Dictator" last week, and now he is placed in a similar situation concerning "The Goodbye." In both instances he comes out with flying colors, having done so well that he has not suffered in the least by comparison with the creators of the roles. His performance is a satisfying to the most severely critical patrons of the Baker.

The decided novelty of seeing Mrs. Mina Crolius Gleason in a recent centric comedy part, and the beautifully artistic manner in which she did it, makes her Miss Prissina, the dance hall girl, as well as the most successful performance which is certain to be longest remembered. If she is not a thing of beauty she is certainly a joy forever, as the vulgar phrase chewing gum and the frequent and spontaneous applause of the audience testified their warm approval.

William Harris as Joe, the lovable, sentimental cow-puncher, made one of the hits of the piece. Mr. Harris has given us a number of similar characterizations which have been capital in every respect. His portrayal of another character part, that of Jim, the murderous half-breed, which he plays splendidly, Maribel Seymour is a very natural and sympathetic Midge, the pet of the ranchman.

Week after week Lucille Webster is showing distinct advancement as a very capable and versatile actress. She plays Molly Larkins, who runs the dance hall, after Clyde Fitch's own heart. It is doubtful if the author himself could suggest an improvement in her interpretation. I've seen the kind of woman Mollie was on her native heath, the Colorado mining camps. Miss Webster is the character to the life.

Arthur Mackley as the steek, insinuating "gentle heavy," gives a fine individual performance, and William Dills, William Gleason, Howard Russell, and Lynnton Athey and James Gleason deserve much commendation for their excellence in the less important parts.

The play is well staged and costumed. Yesterday's audience tested the capacity of the theater and were unreserved in their approval.

"The Cowboy and the Lady" will run all the week.

GOOD MELODRAMA AT EMPIRE

"She Dared Do Right" Pleases Two Big Sunday Audiences.

"She Dared Do Right," a rattling good melodrama, is the bill by the Seaman Stock Company at the Empire this week. There was but one verdict given by those who witnessed the first production yesterday afternoon, all agreeing that it is the best performance since it opened at the Morrison-street playhouse. One thing is certain, and that is that the company gives a better entertainment than more pretentious companies that charge double prices and do not have enough "nerve" to give more than one performance in a week. When you go to the Empire you are assured of an enjoyable entertainment by a company of more than average ability, every member of which does his best.

Raymond Whitaker, Herbert Ashton, C. Keboe and Leo Lindhard, the latter formerly of the Baker Stock Company, Margaret Pitt and Ethel Jones are assigned the principal roles in this week's offering. Henry Bennett, the Coffee King, seeks to force the marriage of his divorced daughter, Grace, who is faithfully impersonated by Ethel Jones, to Paul Harding, played by Raymond Whitaker, a rich and thoughtless young man. Bennett sought to bring about this alliance to perpetuate the business relations that existed between himself and Harding. If the young people do not favor the match
