

GETS EVIDENCE AGAINST ADAMS

Prosecution Fortifies Itself to Prove His Confession Is True.

ABOUT "PETTIBONE DOPE"

Witnesses Arrive to Tell of Pocatello Discovery of Explosive—Orchard Talks to Newspaper Men About His Career.

BOISE, Idaho, May 16.—(Special.)—The arrival of a number of witnesses from Pocatello is regarded as significant of the possible attitude of Steve Adams in the murder case now on trial. The arrivals are: Ex-Chief of Police C. A. Smith, Dan O'Meara, Thomas McConkey and George McConkey.

It will be recalled that in Adams' confession he told of having been sent to Pocatello in 1904 to intercept a carload of nonunion miners being dispatched from the Cour d'Alenes to Colorado. He declared he carried a terrible explosive called "bellfire" or "Pettibone dope." It was believed that this, on being thrown into the car, would explode and envelope all the victims in fire from which they could not escape.

Discovery of Pettibone Dope.

The car did not come, and Adams eventually buried the stuff in an abandoned mill near Pocatello. He was taken down there last year to find it. The search was not wholly successful, only one stopper of a bottle being found, and the old grip in which the stuff had been carried. After the search had been given up, O'Meara and the McConkey boys came in to town, having heard of the expedition, and explained they had found it and that it set fire to everything. They said they threw it into a rubbish heap. Going back, the expedition found the remains of the bottles partially melted where they had thrown them.

Adams gave the name of the hotel where they registered under an assumed name. The hotel had been sold, but the chief went out into the country and found the former owner. The latter had the register of the hotel and on the date given by Adams there appeared the assumed name he had given in his confession. The former chief has brought that register to Boise with him.

Adams May Confirm Confession.

The significance of the presence of these witnesses lies in the fact that they would not be likely to be heard did Adams state not believe that Adams would eventually come over and testify in harmony with his original confession, which he repudiated when the Federation induced his uncle to persuade him to fly the track. Since then Adams has been tried for the murder in Shoshone County, to which he confessed. The jury hung and he is now held for another trial. Mrs. Adams is now here as a witness for the state and the name of Adams is on the state's list of witnesses.

Newspaper Men Indignant.

There was a small-sized riot among the newspaper correspondents this afternoon. It had been arranged that the representatives of the Associated Press and the other news organizations should have an opportunity to see and talk with Harry Orchard. They went out this morning. Two specials, however, got "in on it" through some influence and joined the Associated Press men before the latter got away from the Natorium on their way to the prison. These all had their stories written before wind of the matter got out and then there was an outbreak. Mr. O'Neill, of the Denver Post, and Mr. Carberry, of the Boston Globe, got out in the afternoon, but by that time the storm of protest had reached such a point that a general invitation was issued for all to go out at 8 o'clock. It had not been intended at first to admit others than the Associated Press men, but when the natural protest was registered, the authorities, who had not thought of discrimination, feeling the Associated Press men might be admitted without impropriety, since they represented so many papers, determined to remedy the mistake that had been committed when the first two specials got into it. All did not get out in the final expedition, as they failed to get the invitation, but they will probably constitute another expedition later on.

Orchard Missed Fortune.

Orchard received the crowd much as he had received the Associated Press men and their companions. He touched upon some matters that were embraced in his former interview. For instance he said he had not been a professional gambler, but had played poker considerably and at one time ran a game for another man for ten days. He owned a sixteenth interest in the Hercules mine, then a prospect, and sold it for $100. Asked how much it was worth now, he said about a half million, he thought.

Asked if he had been coerced into making a statement, he said he had not. He repeated he did not wish to be understood as admitting he had made a confession. He then, at the request of the visitors, dictated the following statement, which was taken down verbatim by all:

"I have nothing in particular to say, but I might say that anything I will say here and now is of my own free will and accord, after taking plenty of time to deliberate. There never was any force or coercion used at any time or any threats by word or deed. There have never been any promises made of any kind."

on a railroad extension set off the powder. The bridge was crushed in by several tons of rock hurled by the blast just as a heavy freight train was going onto the bridge. The negro fireman was killed and the engineer probably fatally hurt. Other rocks were hurled 600 yards and struck residences, crashing through the roofs and floors. Four Greeks who were working on the new lines some distance from the blast were struck by flying pieces of rock. Two of them are in a serious condition.
