IMMORTALS.
 Oberon James Young
 Titania Ida Brooks
 First Fairy Margaret Koller
 Peas Blossom Alice Learn
 Cobweb Lillian White
 Moth Elizabeth Learn
 Mustardseed Bertram Straus
 Indian Boy Ada Ripel
 First Singing Fairy Marion Ellsworth
 Second Singing Fairy Lena Achin
 Dancing Fairy Bertha DeVaney
 Puck Annie Russell

"Night's Dream" he little dreamed what strange inventions should some day be invoked to give his play the seeming of reality. Electricity and the stage mechanism's ingenuity make "A Midsummer Night's Dream," excepting only "As You Like It," the most attractive and interesting of all Shakespeare's comedies. Under modern conditions as presented last night at the Hellig its spectacular features are predominant, granting Miss Annie Russell all credit as one of our greatest artists and being duly appreciative of the excellent work done by some members of her support.
 Miss Russell's performance of Puck like Maude Adams' Lady Babbie and Ethel Barrymore's Carota must be considered as a distinct and individual contribution to the artistic wealth of the American stage. More than any of her contemporaries, perhaps, she has undertaken and splendidly accomplished something that will give her a permanent place in the theatrical hall of fame. No one has ever portrayed Puck, most lovable of fairy rascals, so enchantingly. The eerie charm of her laugh, the haunting melody of her voice and the natural boyish grace of her figure combine to make her irresistible in the part.
 Wagnhals & Kemper have provided Miss Russell with a production that leaves nothing for the eye to ask. The woodland scenes in particular are the acme of stage pictures representing the out-of-doors.
 In the company are a number of actors who are quite competent to be trusted with Shakespeare's verse and words. There are others not creditable to the management, but they are not of sufficient importance.

 Bottom is of course the part next in importance to the star's. In fact our lamented friend Nat Goodwin, and other eminent gentlemen have starred in the role with varying degrees of success. John Bunny who plays the vainglorious, roystering weaver makes the role a positive personal success. The part could scarcely be acted better. Lansing Rowan, who has starred successfully and is something of a favorite here, makes a very satisfactory Helena, although the part is one of limitations.
 Catherine Proctor, cast as Hermia gave little promise in the early scenes, but grew wonderfully in the esteem of the audience and in the quarrel with Helene showed herself capable of acting in the best of company. Ida Brooks made as much of Titania as the opportunities permitted, and was a favorite with the audience.
 The reading of Edwin Mordant as Theseus was notably good as was the work of Thomas Coffin Cooke as Quince.
 There will be a repetition of the performance this afternoon and tonight. It is a rare chance to see "A Midsummer Night's Dream" presented more elaborately than ever before, and to come under the charm of Annie Russell's personality.
GREAT RALLY TONIGHT.

"FIGHTING THE BEEF TRUST"

The Independent Market
 Aren't you proud to see that Portland's best and largest meat market is Smith's, the independent market—the result of one man's fight against the great Chicago Beef Trust?
Don't Eat Beef Trusts Meats
 Smith's meats are firm to the touch, with a sweet, fresh odor. Beef Trust meats get soft and floppy a short time after they leave cold storage. Don't eat them at any price.
