OFTEN BAPTIZES HIS WIFE

VALLEY FARMER CELEBRATES CHANGES OF FAITH.

Strange Form of Religion Practiced by Salem Fanatic—Thought to Be Harmless.

SALEM, Or., June 9.—(Special.)—Baptizing his wife by immersion in the cold waters of a creek every time he has a revelation that materially changes his religion, is one of the strange customs of Lewis Hahn, a self-ordained preacher who resides a few miles north of this city. Hahn has found it necessary to baptize his wife three times and she has consented to the ceremony with the utmost willingness, believing implicitly in the divine origin of her husband's revelations. Hahn is a farmer with a family of five children, ranging in age from about seven to 20. They are an industrious family, making a good living on their little ranch or working in town. There is nothing peculiarly radical in Hahn's teachings and he is considered entirely harmless, though the fact that he claims to receive communications from Heaven raises some question as to what he might do if he thought he had a Divine command. He has written a book of songs for use in his family and for distribution among persons who may be converted to his faith. The songs are a rambling, incoherent composition, lacking both meter and rhyme and not set to music. The members of his family sing the songs in a sort of chant. Hahn visits nearby towns and preaches upon the street corners, but arouses no interest aside from an idle curiosity. So far as known he has had no converts.

Chinook Salmon for Grangers.

Pomona Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, will meet with Columbia Grange, east of the Sandy River, June 18, at which time the delegates and other members will be regaled with a dinner of Chinook salmon. It is announced. The hall is about two miles back from Corbett's on the Columbia River.

The meats of the Beef Trust markets may look all right at first—no doubt of it—because the preservatives and colorings put on the meats and in the sausages, to prevent spoiling, give a bright red color. But each day people come to us and tell us of the deadly after-effects and the sleepless nights they have endured from eating such meats from the Beef Trust markets.
