Thousands of Acres of Central Oregon Must Remain Arid Without Irrigation—Company Working 140,000 Acres Taken Up.

Est A. W. PRESCOTT.

BEND, Or. Aug. 15.—(Staff Correspondence)—Ore enterprise that premises more than any other for the industrial development of Central Oregon is that of irrigation in the Deschutes Valley in the vicinity of Bend. While the timber resources of the Bastern slope of the Cacade Mountains constitute a latent wealth that will at some future time scule of a railroad, this alone could not bring to Central Oregon that permanent productiveness without which the population must siways remain small and widely scattered. To a few people stock raising has been constitutes a latent wealth that will at some future time scule of the work of Special inspect the land. The department of the Interi great development enterprise was taken up by private concerns rather than by the Government, for the United States neciamation Service undoubtedly would have planned and executed the work on a much larger scale and in a more permanent manner than is possible for the private companies to undertake. However that may be, the future of the reclamation work in the Deschutes country now tion work in the Deschutes country now depends apparently upon private enter-prise alone and the Government is free ditches and distributing the water. As compensation, the companies are given a lien on the land to the extent of the esti-mated cost of construction, this estimate being agreed upon between the State Land Board and the company and expressly stipulated in the reclamation contract. Under no circumstances could the state be made liable for any of the cost of reclaiming the land or distributing

In pursuance of this state law and the Federal grant, three projects were under-taken in the vicinity of Bend, in the Deschutes Valley. The Three Sisters Irrigation Company undertook to reclaim 27,000 acres on the west side of the river at an average cost of $10 an acre. The at an average cost of $10 an acre. The Pilot Butte Development Company secured a contract with the state for the reclamation of $4,000 acres on the east side of the river at the same cost per The Oregon Irrigation Company undertook to reclaim 56,000 acres adjacent to and partly surrounded by the lands to be reclaimed by the Pilot Butte Com-pany. The estimated cost of reclamation
P. P. Nelson and John McDonald.
The object of the suit is to force the pany. The estimated cost of reciamation was in that project $11.60 an acre, but no contract was made. In addition, each of these companies, under the terms of the contracts, was to have a perpetual right to charge settlers $1 per acre per year for water supplied to them. The contracts did not specify the quantity of water to be provided, the period of the season within which it must be supplied, what kind of canals must be built or in what manner sales might be made to settlers. While the companies could not own the land and only the state could give deeds, yet it was provided that any settler could secure a deed from the state upon presenting a receipt showing that the com-pany's lien had been paid, so that in reality the sales were to be made by the Three Sisters Makes False Start. Under its contract, the Three Sisters Company began construction of a canal taking water from Tumaio Creek, a tributary of the Deschutes. Later the company sold out to the Columbia Southern Irrigation Company, which concern soon afterward resold to the Columbia Southern Irrigating Company. Some 30 miles of main canal and an equal length of laterals were constructed and sales were made to large numbers of 'settlers,' many of whom were residents of Eastern states and had never seen the land. The sales aggregated nearly the entire irrigable area, the settlers paying one-fifth down, giving notes for the deferred pay-ments. Finally water was provided for the reclamation of 12,000 acres and upon application of the state the Government issued a patent for the land thus found to be reclaimed. At this juncture the company became insolvent and turned its affairs over to its bondholders. Investigation showed that the natural flow of water in Tumalo Creek is not sufficient to irrigate more than 12,000 acres and that in order to complete the project an immense reservoir must be built for the storage of water prior to the irrigation season. The bondholders are unwilling to put more money into the project with only the deferred payments of settlers as compensation; the settlers will make no more payments un-til they see assurance of fulfilment of the company's obligations to them, and there there is not water enough for all. The settlers themselves are in no position to undertake the completion of the system and, on the whole, the project is in a very discouraging condition. In the first place, the promoters of the project ignorantly or carelessly overestimated the water supply. They underestimated the cost of construction, built their canals in too filmsy a manner and undoubtedly wasted much of their money by reason of lack of experience and knowledge of irrigation. What to do with the Columbia Southern project is the problem worrying the State Land Board and the bondholders among whom are W. H. Moore E. E. ers, among whom are W. H. Moore, E. E. Lytle, P. L. Willis, C. M. Keep, J. Frank and R. W. Wilson. Land Irrigated From the Deschutes

The Pilot Butte and Oregon Irrigation Company projects were sold out to the Deschutes Irrigation & Power Company, a concern organized by Ohio capitalists who knew more about gas than they did about water, for they made their money in gas. By means of a flupe over a mile long, they took water from Deschutes River three miles above Bend and conducted it to their lands. A main canal 30 miles long has been constructed for the Pilot Butte tract and another 26

146 Found on a Reef Near Nye Creek Beach.

NEWPORT, Or., Aug. 16.—(Special.) —The most densely populated colony of starfish ever seen on the Nye Creek heach was found yesterday at low tide. On a reef not more than 40 feet long and 10 feet wide 146 starfish were counted. Most of the fish were gathered in bunches of from two to as many as 20 in a bunch, and these colo-nies of the fish were so close together one could scarcely walk through them. The starfish were all either yellow or number in color and counter the color and could purple in color, and ranged in size from two to 12 inches across. The reef on which this unusual colony of starfish was found is covered with water all of the time except at extreme low tide.

Husband Left Most of Wealth to Churches-Horse Rustlers Appear Same Night, Get Fine Animal.

HILLSBORO, Or., Aug. 16 .- (Special.)-Horse rustlers have commenced operations in Washington County, & valued at $250 having been stolen from Owen Murray, a Cedar Mill rancher, the first of the week. The animal was driven into Portland, but a careful search has falled to find the property in that city.

The night the horse was stolen, the same man rifled the house of Mrs. Peter senters as a seed widow. The hels were senften, an aged widow. The beds were torn up and bureaus rifled in search of money. Mrs. Senften was absent from home, having left through fright, caused by a robbery a week before, when a masked man relieved her of between $60 and $100 in the deed of right. and $100 in the dead of night.

Mrs. Senften's husband died in 1904, leaving an estate valued at $9590. His will left the widow but $100 in cash and a life rental of the farm, which is a small one, and gives only sufficient income meagerly to support the woman, now 76 years of age. The balance of the estate was willed to religious societies.

The exhausting heat of the Summe weather causes untold suffering and misery to thousands of men, women and children. Deaths occur on all sides from diarrhôea, dysentery, chills, cholera morbus, typhoid and other fevers, due in a great number of cases to impure water and the consumption of unripe fruits by those whose systems and stomachs are not in a healthy condition.

The many ills that come during the hot, sultry weather can be avoided by keeping the body strong and healthy with Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, the great body-builder.

If all were more careful to keep the system in a vigorous, healthy condition, the germs of these diseases could not obtain a foothold. Leading doctors agree that Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey has not equal as a destroyer of poisonous germs in the body. It is indorsed by the clergy and professional nurses and recommended by all schools of medicine as a positive cure for pneumonia, consumption, grip, dyspepsia, indigestion, nervous prostration, all diseases of the throat and lungs, every form of stomach trouble; malaria, chills, fever, and all rundown, weakened, diseased conditions of the body, brain, mind and muscle. It is a heart tonic, blood purifier and promoter of health and long life; makes the old hearty and young and keeps the young vigorous and strong.
