DR. A. C. SMITH INJURED

Portland Physician Dislocates Ankle by Fall From Horse.

Dr. Andrew C. Smith, the well-known Portland physician, is a patient at St. Vincent's hospital, suffering from a dislocated ankle. The accident occurred in Central Oregon, in the extreme south-western portion of Crook County, about 200 miles from Portland, on Wednesday, August 14. Dr. Smith, with Mrs. Smith, had gone on a fishing and hunting party to the Blue Mountains of Crook County. They were guests of A. L. Mackintosh on his great stock ranch, about 85 miles southeast of Prineville.

At the time of the mishap Dr. and Mrs. Smith were getting ready to go for a horseback ride. When the doctor started to mount, and just as he had placed his left foot in the stirrup, the horse became alarmed, apparently at a rifle in the doctor's right hand, and threw his rider heavily to the ground, badly dislocating his left ankle. Dr. Smith rendered "first aid to the injured" and then summoned other help.
