THIS season's styles in chorus girls are the most, attractive looking I've seen in a decade. Where the pretty girls all come from is a mystery, but, however that may be, they are being shown to great advantage in the musical shows that have journeyed hence since Septem ber 1

These ruminations were inspired by the houquet of American beauties who orna-ment "The Royal Chef." When the cur-tain sild up on the first act at the Heilig last night there was a theaterful of peolast night there was a theaterful of peo-ple in a politely represend compition fit because the girls were so pretty. The chorus makes "The Royal Chef" one among the good attractions that the Hei-lig has offered. The principals range from very good to fair to middling, but the tuneful music, the witty lines and ridiculous situations into which the exiled Chicago politician and his friends fall make it easy for the show to keep up with its chorus. The men in that chorus its chorus. The men in that chorus sing to heat the band, even if they do not get their names on the programme. A new comedian, William J. McCarthy, has the part of Heinrich Lemphauser, the alderman from that dear old Chicago, and alderman from that dear old Chicago, and plays it for all it is worth. His mothods call for morth than a desirable amount-of horseplay. McCarthy was here last in a secondary capacity with "The Princess Chic." He deserves a lot of credit for climbing to a lead in a year's time. His singing of "Let Me Go Back," "It's a Way They Have in Chicago," and "In the Morning" rang like genuine out-fashioned song hits. Gertrude Hutcheson as the Bataly's dauchter same her numbers well.

the audience's favor. The costumes are apparently all new this season and are up to the best mark. "The Royal Chef" is full up of song suc-cesses, in fact the public has become fam-liar with almost all the tures through hearing them whistled on the streets. That is the final test of the p-pularity of a piece. It is in its third or fourth sea-son and is a lively youngster, which gives promise of lasting for years to come. It serves very well indeed for a pleasant evening's entertainment and from the re-cention given it last night it will probably
