Citizens Will Work to Beautify Columbia Park.

At the meeting of the Peninsular Im-At the meeting of the Peninsular Improvement Association Tuesday night, it was decided to join forces with the University Park Board of Trade in urging that Columbia Park be beautified with graveled walks, flower beds, etc. There was considerable discussion concerning Columbia Park, and it was the general columbia Park, and it was the general to the first court to be made more at Columbia Park, and it was the general belief that it ought to be, made more attractive as it is located in the central portion of the Peninsula, and has 30 acres that could be made as beautiful as the City Park on the West Side. It is proposed that the cleared space of perhaps 10-acres on the east side of the part not covered with trees be planted in roses and flowers. Melvin Carrier was appointed a committee to confer with the University Park Board of Trade.

A report was made to the effect that the property owners on Pippon street were willing to open it 60 feet wide, but ob-

M. A. A. C. Old Ballad Concert and Ball

REPRESENTATIVE audience at-Ball at the Oriental building, last night, under the auspices of the Multnomah Amateur Athletic Club. The arena used during the recent horse show was metamorphosed into a splendid ballroom, the der of their "arrival" were to boxes and balconies draped with brilliant red and white Multnomah colors combined with flags. The boxes in most instances were occupied by the patrons and patronesses and the stage boxes by the Multnomah football team and officers of the club.

The first number on the programme, a violin solo, "Concerto No. 2, Romance" (Wieniawski), was played with feeling by Mrs. Susan Fennel Pipes, of Eugene, and showed breadth of tone and technique. Julius V. Seyler, pianist, a recent arrival in the musical circles of Portland in the Strauss Tansis Valse Caland, in the Strauss-Tansig Valse Ca-price, "Man Lebf nur Einmal," received a welcome. This number was played a welcome. This number was played brilliantly with fine execution.

Carl Sobesti, of Boston, a lyric baritone, who has a reputation as a composer here and abroad, sang most pleasingly several numbers. His voice is charmingly adapted for the type of songs which he chose for the occasion. The Two Grenadlers' number was wonderfully well sung. Mrs. Walter Reed's sympathetic rich contraits was heard to sympathetic rich contraito was heard to advantage in "Annie Laurie." Quoting from one of the oft-repeated verses, "Her voice was low and sweet," seems admirably adapted as a description of Mrs. Reed's voice.

Miss Kathleen Lawler's clear lyric so-prano showed splendid carrying quality and purity of tone in Balfe's "Killarand purity of tone in Paties Killarney," Miss Frances Batchellor had the distinction of being the only amateur on the programme and played brilliantly the pretentious number, Liszt's "Polonalse in E major." Since his return from abroad, Frederick Creitz, the violukt shows improvement in breadth of linist, shows improvement in breadth of tone and technique. He scored heavily in Ernst's "Hungarian Aria."

in Ernst's "Hungarian Aria."

Mrs. Rose Bloch-Bauer, dramatic soprano, was heard after an absence of almost a year. The carrying quality, temperament and delightful timbre of her voice are still in evidence, and her one number, "The Star-Spangled Banner," was received with enthusiasm, the entire audience standing.

The accompanists, Miss Elizabeth Patterson Sawyer, Elizar E. Coursen and Mr.

BY JOHN JAY HARRISON. REPRESENTATIVE audience attended the Old Ballad Concert and one hand to enumerate the really great stars of the weaker sex on the dramatic stage today. Commencing with the thumb, it might be that Maude Fealy would be the little finger, if only the or-would come pretty near starting the line of digita.

To a certain extent it is a handleap for a young actress to be compelled to live down a record of having her picture receive first prize in a beauty contest, especially when that record has been attained in the art center of the world-Paris. It is no small distinction to have supported Sir Henry Irving, and just a little less to have been leading woman in our own American author-actor's com pany, that of William Gillette. Miss Fealy has not lived down the first-named notoriety, but she has done better-she has improved upon it. No more strikingly beautiful actress has been seen across the footlights since the day of Adelaide Neilson, and Miss Fealy, though a different type of feminine loveliness, possesses much of the dramatic genius that made Mile. Neilson the success of the early expenses. early seventies. After seeing the new star yesterday in "The Stronger Sex" at the Heilig theater, Irving's and Gillette's choice of Miss Fealy as a member of their companies can be rell understood. Miss Fealy has the same charm of man-ner possessed by Mande Alexander. Miss Fealy has the same charm of manner possessed by Maude Adams, that made that other Western girl the pet of the public that she is, and as for talent, the newcomer need take no second place to any of her artistic sisters, whether from the East or West.

Miss Fealy had been heralded almost with fulsomeness, and the capacity houses yesterday and last night came with expectation, raised to the highest with expectation, raised to the highest point, but it is no exaggeration to say that not a single person left the theater after the last pleasing tableau not fully of the opinion that for once advance notices were justified.

Not only has the Dresden china beauty fulfilled expectations in her personality, she also evidenced dramatic talent equal to that personality in every particular. She is winsome, convincing marviculus, vincing, marvelously natural, and is gifted with a rarely musical voice, clear and bell-toned. Her training is of that high order that enables her to cover a man with a pistol without the ustomary melodramatic flourish makes it appear one of the most casual makes it appear one of the most casual things in the world, but at that, the intention to shoot if occasion warrant is not lacking—even if the pistol be unloaded. When in the play the actress is called upon to show strong emotion she rises to the point almost of perfection, but it is in the kittenish, teasing moods that she wins most friends, and there are plenty of opportunities in "The Stronger Sex" for the charming little lady to display her various accomplishments.

her various accomplishments.
Florence Robinson, who is well and favorably known to Portland from English grand dame to the life. Her characterization is one of the best pieces of work seen here in many a day. Mise Mary Bertrand as "Jo Forsythe" gives a fairly good account of herself, but the part calls for a few natural endowments unfortunately not possessed by the young woman. She has dramatic ability, however, and that makes up for much. The other female parts are filled satisfactorily, but are of minor importance.

The audience welcomed Richie Ling boisterously, and his acting of "Oliver Marchaeles". Thorpe" was up to the standard this ex cellent artist set when here as a mem-ber of the Californians in light opera Brandon Hurst, an English actor who supported Mrs. Fiske last season, estab-lished himself at once in Portland as a finished and painstaking actor, and as the husband of Mary Warren (Miss Fealy) carried out the author's idea to the letter. He is not too English y'know just enough so to impress an American audience savorably. The Hebrew money lenders and the house servants are ad

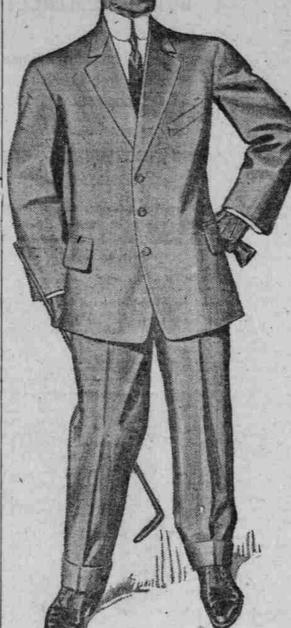

As for the play, "The Stronger Sex" is a cleverly constructed story of the exren has a most difficult problem pre-sented to her for solution before she has an opportunity to change her wedding gown. She sets about it with a deter-mination that surprises not only her husband but everybody else, especially the audience. She is an American girl in England, and her cousin, Oliver Thorpe, is a good type of a clean, self-reliant American gentleman. There are the usual misunderstandings, and the young wife is the last to find out the young wife is the last to find out the truth concerning her husband's change of heart, but the whole play works through along new lines and ends in a way that will please the people of Portland who were unable to see it at yesterday matinee or last night, for they are certain to attend the remaining three performances of the engagement.

A word must be said congratulatory of Mr. Cort, under whose management

THANKSGIVING WITH ELKS Members and Their Friends Partake of Luncheon in the Stein Room

Beginning at noon yesterday members of the local lodge of Fiks and their friends called at the clubhouse and exchanged good cheer and partook of the Thanksgiving luncheon prepared and spread in the steinroom. During the afternoon bachelor members were congregated in the clubrooms amusing themselves in the various forms provided, and the stewards and assistants were kept busy serving turkey sandwiches, lobster salad and such like dainties all the afternoon and far into the evening. Married men were by no means conspicuous by their absence, for the hearty club spirit evidenced in the representation of members was shared by those who had only time to drop in, exchange a word or members was shared by those who had only time to drop in, exchange a word or two with their fellow-herdsmen and depart to sit at the head of the family table and "help" the kids to drumsticks and a "bit of the white meat."

The rooms were decorated with Fall greens and chrysanthemums and presented a beautiful appearance. Secretary Bills and his staff were in evidence during the day and were ever ready at all times to lend aid toward making the day pleasant and agreeable to visitors. The customary greeting of the Christmas holiday season was altered by "the best people an earth" to "much obliged,"
