ENTER FOR BIG PARADE

Directors of Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition Also Write Cordial Letter Promising That Fair Will Be Represented.

Several big questions relative to the Portland Rose Festival of next June were taken up by the ways and means and exploitation committees, which met jointly at festival headquarters last night.

When this matter was brought up, General Manager George L. Hutchin read communications from commercial bodies and publicity clubs from nearly a dozen Oregon cities, including Astoria, Hood River, Roseburg, Eugene, Marshfield, Medford, The Dalles, La Grande, Union and Pendleton, and the tone of each letter was favorable to the project.

Seattle Will Send Nugget.

The directors of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition were heard from in a most cordial letter in which the promise was made to bring a float to compete in the all-Northwestern parade.

The City Park Board was handed without gloves by the meeting for allowing the Olmsted Brothers, who sent a representative here to bid on the project.

General Manager Hutchin was instructed to wire the expert float builders who have designed and constructed the symbolic pieces for the St. Louis "Votive Prophets" for the past 20 years, to come here at once and begin preliminary work on the floats that are to be entered in the various street parades during the festival week.

Bring Floatbuilders Here.

Addresses were made by various members of the ways and means committee showing that widespread interest has already been aroused in the celebration.

PRINTERS GIVE BALL

Typographical Union Ends Twenty-fifth Year.

HAS HAD RAPID GROWTH

Interesting Programme at Woodmen Hall Is Followed by Games, Dancing and Refreshments.

Attendance Is Large.

A largely attended and thoroughly successful affair was the twenty-fifth anniversary of Multnomah Typographical Union, No. 58, which was held last night at the Woodmen Hall on East Sixth street, near Alder.

The early portion of the evening was devoted to an interesting programme that included introductory remarks by J. J. Price, song by Miss Alberta Butler; recitation, by Mrs. J. P. Morgan; song, by Mrs. E. Kleist, and a recitation, by Miss Pickthorn.

Dancing followed the grand march, and later an elaborate banquet. For those who preferred cards to dancing various games were played in an adjoining room.

The decorations were artistic and excellent music was furnished.

A year prior to the origin of the union, in 1882, Portland boasted of a population of 20,000. It was during the time of the Villard boom and money was plentiful.

There were then four daily newspapers—The Oregonian, Telegram, Standard and News—and the weekly publications, The Northwest, Rural Spirit, Sunday Mercury and Sunday Welcome.

At that time the printer was not infrequently a dearest of progress, and the same year application was made for a charter and the meeting for organization was held January 7, 1882, in the Holmes building, 316 First street.

At that time the charter was adopted, together with constitution and by-laws; the name Multnomah was chosen, officers elected, and No. 58 launched on a successful career with 39 active members.

Frank G. Lee was the first president; Alex. Rose, vice-president; John M. Vaughn, recording and corresponding secretary; E. Detwiler, financial secretary and treasurer; Donald Munro, state deputy; J. L. Pitchford, sergeant-at-arms.

The union was sometimes referred to as the "Frank G. Lee Union."

Not until 1894 were linotype machines installed and then the old-time hand compositor were relegated to the back-ground.

In the march of progress, machinery has revolutionized the printing business, hand composition is replaced by linotype, and now a man can be a printer without knowing the lower-case "e" box or a pica quad from a ten-penny nail.

At the ball last night the printed programmes were unusually attractive, appropriate verse being introduced. As a finale:

"Let us hope that all the errors in each life galaxy will be lightly passed by the Great Profreader."

The committee of arrangements consisted of J. J. Price, chairman; Harry H. Austin, F. D. DeWert, Thomas Gibson, Fred Perry, E. M. Zigler and James F. Rait.

The reception committee was composed of Will Dalt, chairman; R. Percy Coburn, George Vath, J. L. McCown, W. H. Stivers, J. Dunaway, O. W. Athey and O. Gallup, and the card committee was George H. Howell, chairman; J. T. Hayes, W. H. Baker, L. E. Gottshall, F. R. Mitchell, Arthur Purdy and Z. M. Young.

Death of Henry W. Gilpin.

Henry Wellington Gilpin, who died recently at St. Vincent's Hospital, was born in New York City, August 6, 1848. Later his parents made their home in Toronto, Canada, where Mr. Gilpin spent his youth, later coming to San Francisco, where he was a contractor for 12 years and was finally successful. Realizing that there would be greater opportunities in Oregon he settled on a farm near Astoria, Ore., in 1884. Later he returned to the East and met his wife, Miss Lois James, of Burlington, Ia., whom he married May 7, 1884. With her assistance he accumulated a comfortable fortune. Eight years later he planned and constructed a beautiful summer home, which is known as Gilpin's Summer home on Eight-Mile Creek. His health began to fail five years ago. He spent the last two months of his life at his residence in this city, with his wife and family. He leaves a wife, two sons and two daughters. The funeral was held at The Dalles, where services were conducted by the Rev. D. V. Polling, of the First Congregational Church.
