CHOICE APPLES ON DISPLAY

More Than 200 Members of State Society Attend Annual Session and Listen to Papers on Practical Questions.

Having buried the hatchet of overgealous rivalry, 300 horticulturists, reprenting all of the prominent fruit-growing ections of the state, are attending the sections of the state, are attending the annual sessions of the Oregon State Hortleultural Society, in the Woodmen of the World Hall, at Alder and Eleventh streets. Assembled at this meeting are the apple fanciers of Hood River, the Rogue River Valley and the Willamette Valley, and a commendable feeling of harmony pervades the meetings, which are devoted to an earnest and intelligent disharmony pervades the meetings, which are devoted to an earnest and intelligent discussion of subjects conducive only to the general production of better fruit uniformly in every section of the state.

Not the least important attraction of this annual meeting is one of the most creditable exhibitions of apples that has ever been shown at a similar gathering in this state. In all there are about 200 hoxes of the very choicest of Oregon apples that have been entered in friendly competition. There is an especially keen competition. There is an especially keen contest on among the exhibitors of the Newtowns and for Spitzenbergs, although all of the other varieties, so successfully grown, are • well represented. In connection with the apple exhibit, the Yambili County Walnut Club has an excellent display of English walnuts that the experience of these exhibitors has demonstrated can be produced profitably

Among the most interesting papers presented yesterday afternoon was that by State Engineer J. H. Lewis, of Salem. He urged the necessity of legislation for regulating the appropriation of water and at the same time protecting vested rights. In support of the value of an unfailing water supply for horticultural purposes, the speaker cited an instance in the vicinity of Walla Walla, where, from 200 acres of Irrigated land, $500,000 worth of fruit had been gathered. ## Horticulture in Early Days.

"Reminiscences" was the subject assigned Dr. J. R. Cardwell, ex-president of the Florticultural Society. It was an interesting paper in which the veteran horticulturist reviewed the history of fruitgrowing in this state from 1822, when Oregon practically supplied California with pest-free apples, until the present time. He gave a brief history of the introduction of different fruit plants into this state together with the appearance this state together with the appearance of various pests and the success that has attended the efforts of the State Board of Horticulture in a campagin of education to eradicate these unwelcome intrud-
