Out of a Job

The "out-of-a-job" man can quickly find employment if he advertises in The Oregonian. There are many employers in Portland anxious to secure the services of men and women in all branches of business. Most of them wisely use the "want" columns of The Oregonian, and take their pick of the applicants. You can take your pick of jobs if you do as the employer does and advertise. Tell your qualifications in a "want" ad and you will be surprised at the many business houses which need such help as you can give.

You can, of course, apply for a position from door to door, or office to office, but that takes time and carfare, and the chances are you won't be listened to. You will be listened to, however, if you advertise in The Oregonian "Situations Wanted" columns. Hundreds of business men read these ads eagerly every morning, and your ad will receive respectful attention, and, if worded properly, you will be in a position to pick your job.

In this way you place your application—for that is what the ad will be—before a large audience of employers, an audience that could not be reached in any other way. Your name need not appear in the ad. It can be addressed care of The Oregonian, and no one but yourself will know who the applicant is.

Rate on "Situations Wanted" advertisements is one cent a word each insertion.
