mittee appointed by the United East Side Clubs to gather statistics regarding the traffic over the bridges and up and down traffic over the bridges and up and down the Willamette River, will meet tonight in the Sargent Hotel. The committee is composed of W. L. Boise, A. G. Rushitzit, T. H. Compton, Joseph Buchtel, R. B. Fisher, C. Ben Riesland, A. B. Mantey, J. F. Kertchem and Dr. William Deveny. Statistics have heen collected which will be used to show that the traffic over the bridges is enormous and constantly increasing. It will be tabulated and put in shape to be submitted to the War Department to demonstrate the necessity of having the draws closed at certain hours morning, noon and evenat certain hours morning, noon and ever ing, when the traffic on streetcars and in other ways is heavy. In order to ec-cure better results the general commit-tee was divided into aubcommittees, from which full reports are expected at the meeting tonight.

COST OF SEWER $125,000.—It is estimated that the sewer system approved by the Sellwood Board of Trade for the district between East Fifteenth street and the Willamette River will cost on an average of $70 to $80 a lot, which inviudes the mains and interals, and that the total cost will be about $125,000. In the district are a little over 1800 lots. The district extends from the Portland Crematorium to the golf links. Councilman Wills said yesterday that the whole matter is now in the hands of the people who are interested and they will be allowed full swing without interference from the Board of Trade. Property-owners in the district cast of Fifteenth may conclude also to take some further COST OF SEWER $125,000 .- It is estimated may conclude also to take some further action, although they have been in the past almost unanimously against the plans for a sanitary system with a septic

FROM EARLY MORNING until late Monday and yesterday evening Graves & Co.'s musical establishment was crowded Ca's musical establishment was crowded with music lovers who good naturedly struggled with each other in their efforts to take advantage of the tremendously reduced prices. As was fully stated in Sunday's Oregonian. Graves & Co. are compelled to dispose of their immense stock of sheet music, talking machines, planes and musical instruments on account of being forced out of their present location. musical instruments on account of being forced out of their present location. The prices have been ruthlessly sacristed and are undoubtedly the lowest ever seen in this city. It is the intention to dispose of everything in the quickest time possible, and this will not be long, judging from the way buyers througed the stors yesterday.

Bauer-Kreisler Recital at Heilig

NOT wrapped in legendary mists, without the strength-giving quality of Samson-like hair, and concentrating attention by art and talent, Harold Bauer, planist, and Fritz Kreis-ier, violinist, appeared in joint recital at the Heilig Theater last night, before a crowded audience, which nearly exhausted itself in giving every mark of appreciation possible.

a crowded audience, which nearly exhausted itself in glving every mark of appreciation possible.

In the attendance, music, society and student life were all represented. The occasion was the evening of St. Patrick's day, yet Bauer is English by birth, his father German and his mother English; and Kreisier, Austrian, There's not much Irish there, surely. So, to get the Irish sentiment that must have been in the air, we turned to the programmes, which, appropriately enough, were printed in green! It had better be explained that Bauer and Kreisier are not touring the country together. One artist has been touring South and the other North, and observing that the two artists would very possibly be in this region about the same date, Lois Steers-Wynn Coman arranged for a joint recital in this city. This makes Bauer's third visit here, and Kreisler's second. Now, I am not going into a painstaking dissertation on the various excellencies of Harold Bauer as a planist, and try to point out wherein he differs from other tone wizards. One pianist belongs to the thunder-crashing school of dy. tone wizards. One pianist belongs t the thunder-crashing school of dy-namics—although he really does not have a habit of placing his feet on the

have a habit of placing his teet on the keyboard as has been suggested, and another genius is an imitator of the first and talks to himself as he plays. Where does Bauer belong? It's all a matter of taste. You would have to place, say, six of the world's ggest planists on the same platform, and have them play, after one another, the same selections, on the same kind of a plano, until the question could be fairly settled as to which one among them was tled as to which one among them was the "greatest." Bauer is one of these great artists. It is true, he is rather a pupil of Paderewski than of Letchetizky, but he has created and follows a school of his own. It is good to hear him play—nay, it is a rare privilege. Worth money and time. He is not a poseur, but impresses by tone creation, clarity and sanity. I believe that he is the most satisfactory interpretator of Schumann, for his Schumann is manly and coherent, and without weak sentimentality. Generally, Bauer's present playing is, quietly intellectual, yet heart-searching. He does not leave behind him a number of unoffending wrecked planos, because of having tested his muscles on the keyboard.

It is noteworthy that Baber began etizky, but he has created and follows

It is noteworthy that Bauer began his musical career as a violinist, and that Paderewski advised him to devote that Padereweki advised him to devote himself to the plano. Therefore, Bauer must have enjoyed himself last night, when he and Kreisler played Bethoven's "Kreutzer Sonata." It was a magnificent presentation. Bauer's treatment of the Chopin "Barcarolle" suggested strings of sparkling pearls, while the Brahms was exquisitely shaded. He was offered many encores, but his only extra number was shaded. He was offered many encores, but his only extra number was Chopin's A flat waitz.

Kreisler, military and dignified-looking, and yet "full of music from his toes up," has broadened in his art since last we heard him. I think he has poise and a new authority, while his bow technique is tremendous. He must now be accepted as one of the world's great violinists. He also refused many encores, and played one fused many encores, and played one extra an "Aria," by Bach.

When the concert was over, both artists were cordially welcomed behind the scenes by several friends. I gathered up enough courage to approach Bauer, and in reply to a query, he said: "We have played the programme just as it is printed. No changes."

BOARD HOLDS ANNUAL ELEC TION AND BANQUET.

Members Plan to Make Excursions Additions to Portland.

At the adjourned meeting of the Portland Realty Board, held last night at the Commercial Club, in addition to an elaborate banquet, there occurred the annual election of officers to serve for the current year. The following were choson:
President, H. W. Fries; first vice-president, A. H. Birrell; second vice-president, W. R. Sinnot; treasurer, Elnathan Sweet; secretary, James O. Rountree. The newly elected officers upon accepting their respective places, addressed the board and promised to infuse additional interest in the organization, and to that end invitations were extended through Secretary Rountree for excursions to various points where plats are laid out and lots placed on the market. The first of these excursions will be Saturday, March 21, to Rose City Park, starting at 2 P. M. The next to Overlook, and the following Saturday to

F. E. Beach addressed the board on the proposed measure to come before the people at the next election sustaining an people at the first election sustaining an appropriation of M75,000 to the State University at Eugene, and a resolution was adopted favoring the appropriation.

Fred Muller, secretary of the Board of Trade, addressed the meeting on the work outlined by that organization for this year, explaining in detail the com-mercial exchange feature recently adopted by that body in connection with its other work. Resolutions were passed favoring the proposed real estate exchange and at the next meeting it is hoped to elect officers and organize the necessary working forces so that the exchange shall become a reality.

The next regular meeting of the Realty Board will be held the first week in April at the assemblyroom of the Chamber of Commerce, when there is to be a smoker and talks by several members and in vited guests.

Police Call Jackpot in "Friendly" Game

Man Who Had Three Nines Is Glad Law Intervened When He Sees Opponent's Three Jacks.

THE old, old jest about three "coppers beating a jack full" was enacted in real life late yesterday afternoon, when three officers raided a "friendly" poker game that was being played in a cottage at the corner of Seventh and Oak streets. There were seven men in the game. The roof was the limit. They had their coats off and all their available cash, including next month's board in several cases, no doubt, arranged before them in betting arrary.

A big jackpot was declared. The deal passed several times and it was "fat" when opened for $10 by the man next to the dealer. The next man "raised be fore the draw," but everybody got in. There was $84 in the pot. Jim, Rak, Sol, John, Red, Sprecht and Gregory were the players, according to the meage record kept by a "tab" in the "bank. Those nicknames may give some clew to their identities to their friends, as all gave fictitious names later at the police gave fictitious names later at the police station.

The "draw" had just been made. All, drew three cards apiece. The first man bet $30. The next one had just raised it $30 when the door was smashed in and Detectives Kay, Smith and Kienlan covered the only avenue of escape. Mr. Hay at once "raked in" the "pot." The hand was not played out.

At the police, station Red, a fat-faced youth who ought to have been busy over next Sunday's Bible lesson instead of squandering all hopes of facing his landlady with a free countenance, was inconsolable.

"I was in the hole about $50 and would have got off ahead if you fellows had waited five minutes longer," he told Mr. Kay sorrowfully. "I had three nines and the pot was good for $150."

"Maybe you don't know when you're well off," suggested the sympathetic Smith, whose large expanse of shoulder had shattered the door of the gaming room.

"Three nines was a cinch," protested

"Three nines was a cinch," protested "Red."
Mr. Smith had a happy thought and possibly a little bit of curiosity. He got the deck and found the players' hands hadn't been disturbed much in the process of confiscation. He assorted them carefully.

"Look here, young man," he said to the youthful mourner.
The victim of the gaming fever looked.

It was the land of another player and

The victim of the gaming fever leoked. It was the hand of another player and consisted of three jacks.

"Say, I'm mighty glad now you raided us," he said.

Not only was the money found on the table confiscated, but the players were required to leave $5 bail apiece. The room was plainly fitted up for extensive gambling. A fat old woman who gave her name as Jane Chapman was held as the proprietor of the place and made to put up $50. The police say this woman made a pretext at keeping house, although she was in reality harboring daily gambling. Her parlor was fitted up as a poker room. up as a poker room.
