The im practicability of placing the institutions naide the city limits made such a con struction necessary, and if the institu-tions could be placed outside the city lim struction lia at all, a difference of a mile or two was immaterial. All the institutions named get their mall at Salem.

Divide Up State Patronage.

The arguments offered in favor of the proposed amendment are that state in-stitutions should be distributed over the state so as to give all sections a share of public appropriations and so as to accommodate as large a number of peo-ple as possible; also, that a more suitlocation can sometimes be found elsewhere.

Against the proposed amendment it is argued that scattering the institutions over the state paves the way for trades and combinations in the Legislature for the purpose of controlling appropriations and combinatio this argument, in fact, that he constitutional convention to caused the provide that all institutions shall be loated at the seat of government. Dur-ng the territorial government there was constant trouble over the location of ing the public institutions and to eliminate this difficulty, the provision was made set-tling the question in the Constitution. It is now said that if the location of state institutions at various places be ermitted, trades will be made in the egislature by which members from one Legislature by which members from on section will be given an institution of increased appropriation upon condi tion that they support measures or ap-propriations desired by other members. Experience has shown that trades of this kind are very con

Shifts Onus From Legislature.

On the other hand, it is remarked that the proposed section provides for loca-tion of institutions away from the Capi-tal only upon approval of the people and no harm can result. The rejoinder is heard that this merely extends the trading from the Legislature to the people and will start a demand for location of institutions upon the basis of patronage rather than upon the basis of utility. With such a provision in the Constitu tion, a legislator's ability would be measured largely by his success in get-ting legislative sanction to the location of a state institution in his county. effected by cutting out a rear door

It is pretty generally agreed by those who should know, that it would be bet-ter if a branch insane asylum could be located in Eastern Oregon, thereby giving the asylum authorities choic climate in determining where patients shall be kept. This will be one of the strongest arguments in support of the adoption of the amendment. It will be opposed upon the general proposition that it enlarges the opportunity for trad-ing on appropriations.
