LOS ANGELES, Cal., April 14.—(Special.)—Why Portland could ever lose a game to any team is what has kept the local fans guessing since today's contest, in which Los Angeles was shut out, 7 to 0. Little Pernoll was almost invincible, and allowed but three scattered singles. Only one Los Angeles man reached second base, and he made it on a pass and a single, and in the next minute went out on a double play. The double plays were the feature of the game, there being no less than seven.

Thorsen was in fair shape, but was hit hard in the fourth and fifth innings, and the locals helped along the four scores in the fourth with two bad errors. Danzig's double and Bassey's triple came in this inning. In the fifth two singles, two steals and Danzig's triple sent in two runs, and the final came from McCredie's single, an out and Delmas' error. Casey, Cooney and Delmas furnished the good fielding stunts.

The game was fast and snappy, but the thousand fans present lost interest after the Beavers had made four runs and followed these five minutes later with two more. McCredie's team looks very good here, and the Beavers probably have reached their stride now.

TO MEET "STRANGLER SMITH"

Dr. Roller Agrees to Take On Local Wrestler.

Dr. B. F. Roller, of Seattle, the heavyweight wrestler who will meet Victor McLaglen, of South Africa, on the mat at the Heilig Theater tonight, arrived in Portland yesterday afternoon and spent some time in renewing old acquaintances made here during his football days. Dr. Roller was formerly the star fullback of the Seattle Athletic Club eleven and is well known in Portland.

Since he has embraced the wrestling game, Dr. Roller has yet to meet defeat. He has wrestled several of the crack wrestlers of the country, including Gotch, "Farmer" Burns and Westergaard, and scored victories over the last named two, while the former was unable to throw the Seattle man in the time limit specified.

When Roller met McLaglen last Fall the young fellow was practically inexperienced in the catch-as-catch-can game and has begged so anxiously for a return match that Roller finally consented to take him on again. McLaglen believes confidently that he can defeat the Seattle star, and will go on the mat tonight with that idea in view.

In referring to this match and also in regard to his coming engagements, Dr. Roller said last night: "I believe that I can defeat any wrestler in the world and it is my intention to meet them all if I can possibly secure matches with them. I understand McLaglen has improved wonderfully since my last meeting with him, when I defeated him by footholds, which he then knew nothing of. I hope to win tomorrow night, but I have learned not to enter any sort of a contest with overconfidence and shall not be caught napping by McLaglen or any other man I shall meet."

"Strangler" Smith was introduced to Roller last night. On being informed of the latter's desire, Dr. Roller replied: "I shall meet you anywhere you desire on a date between April 22 and the middle of May, providing that you post a side bet of $1000 in the hands of any reliable person or newspaper in this city or Seattle, and you may use the strangle hold if you wish."

Smith says he will raise the money. Smith and Roller agreed that if the match is arranged it will take place in Portland.

Dr. Roller is to meet Jesse Westergaard in a return match at Seattle on April 22 and will probably meet Fred Beell in Seattle three weeks after that date. In the meantime he will take on "Strangler" Smith if the latter succeeds in posting the required amount.

PLEADS CAUSE OF COLORED SOLDIERS

Negroes Fill Senate Galleries When Foraker Makes Great Speech.

OVATION AT ITS CLOSE

Storm of Applause Drowns Noise of Gavel—Speaker Demands That the Discharged Infantrymen Be Allowed to Re-enlist.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—Applause that smothered the noise of the Vice-President's gavel attested the warmth of the reception given by the crowded galleries of the Senate to the speech of Senator Foraker today in defense of the colored soldiers discharged without honor by the President because of their supposed connection with the Brownsville affair. The day was made notable in the annals of Senatorial oratory.

Never in the history of the Senate have the galleries been so fully surrendered to representatives of the negro race, more than half of the crowds that filled every available seat and standing-room being occupied by them.

All Galleries Filled.

They came early and secured the points of vantage in all the galleries except that reserved for members of the families of Senators. The only seats unoccupied were in the sections reserved for the use of the President.

The Senator began by saying that evidently there was a misapprehension concerning his speech, and read from a newspaper clipping to the effect that he was to deliver a three-days' speech in denunciation of the President and the Secretary of War. He laughingly disavowed his intention to do either of the things charged against him. He proceeded to read his address, his voice ringing clear throughout the chamber except that toward the end he showed slight signs of exhaustion.

Beginning with a careful analysis of the evidence taken in regard to the Brownsville riot, Foraker said the purpose of the inquiry had been not to embarrass the President or make capital, political or otherwise, but to find the facts. He said the soldiers "gave their evidence with such straightforward frankness and with such manifest truthfulness that nothing remains to show their complete vindication except only the discovery of the real culprits."

Witnesses Not Reliable.

He said the witnesses against the soldiers had testified four times and their evidence was so contradictory as to be unreliable. The flimsy and unreliable character of all was illustrated by that of the four eyewitnesses. On the other hand, the circumstantial evidence against the soldiers turned out in their favor. He denied that any motive had been shown for the soldiers' frequented the saloons little and never complained of being debarred from drinking at certain saloons. Their character was good, there was no contradiction in their testimony, and their officers believed them. The citizens had abundance of the same kind of ammunition as the soldiers, and the latter had accounted for every cartridge on the day after the riot.

Terms of Re-enlistment.

He compared the provisions of Warner's and his own bill for re-enlistment of the discharged soldiers. Warner's gives the President authority to re-enlist them, if satisfied that they took no part in the affair; Forakers makes re-enlistment mandatory if the soldier takes oath that he did not participate in the riot and did not know who were guilty. It also annuls the record of discharge without honor and the order debarring the men from enlistment in the Navy. He declared that Congress, not the President, has authority to decide who shall or shall not enlist. Warner's bill would only pretend to grant relief, for none would follow. It would require the men to prove their innocence before a hostile judge who had already adjudged them guilty. He concluded by saying of the negro soldiers:

"They ask no favors because they are negroes, but only justice because they are men."

Great Burst of Applause.

The utmost silence prevailed during nearly three hours. Then the Senator's final reference to the part the colored race had taken in the military service of the country called forth smothered applause, and when he finished there was resounding hand-clapping, which defied the gavel of the Vice-President, and continued for several minutes. As the ovation ended, Vice-President Fairbanks made the usual announcement about the rules of the Senate forbidding demonstrations in the galleries.

Colleagues of the Ohio Senator then crowded around him. Senator Warner, whose bill for the re-enlistment of the negro soldiers he had antagonized, was the first to grasp his hand. One after another, senators from both sides of the chamber congratulated him upon his presentation of the subject.

Message Is Not Heard.

Towards the close of Mr. Foraker's address the President's secretary announced a "message in writing," but the attempt to read after Mr. Foraker concluded was made difficult because of the confusion, and in rather unusual manner it was skimmed through, so that only a bare announcement of its purport was possible. Senator Hale came to the rescue of the Vice-President, who was endeavoring to restore order, by a motion to adjourn.

LUCKY LUDLOW, MASS.

Millions in Store for a Little Factory Town.

Boston Herald.

The little town of Ludlow, not far from Springfield, Mass., has a dazzling future before it. After a while $10,000 is going to be distributed to certain of its citizens.

After another while $317,268 will be passed around. And finally, after a third chance to get its breath, $10,192,196 will be bestowed on the Ludlow folks.

It is stupendous. There is only one trouble. It's going to be an uncommonly long time between chances to quaff this golden flood. Ludlow, in fact, is keeping quite calm.

Charles D. Rood is the man who has planned these magnificent windfalls for his native village. He was born in Ludlow 66 years ago, and still has a Summer home there. But at an early age he left the place, went out into the world and proceeded to make money. He decided to give some to Ludlow.

The first installment, amounting to $1000, will be placed at interest until the next centennial of Ludlow's settlement and then be distributed among the worthy poor of the town, especially in the center district. Certain sums, to be given to every young man who has abstained from the use of intoxicating liquors and tobacco until his 21st birthday, are excepted.

Another $1000 will be placed at interest and used in the second centennial in the same manner.

A third $1000 will be placed at interest and used in the third coming centennial under similar conditions.

Of the fourth $1000, the interest is to be used perpetually and annually for prizes for the best pupils in the different schools.

These gifts may look comparatively small on their face, but when figured out in their ultimate proportions, they loom large. The next centennial of the town will come 68 years from next June. The first $1000, invested at 3½ per cent interest, compounded semi-annually, as is the custom with savings banks, will amount to $9875 on the next centennial day.

As Ludlow has but 3881 inhabitants, according to the census of 1905, and the total number of registered voters last year was less than 500, this sum will provide adequately for the abstemious young men and the worthy poor, unless the town grows more rapidly than it has in the last 134 years.

The second $1000, invested under similar conditions, will yield $317,268, at the following centennial, 166 years from now. With the knowledge of this fund, which doubtless will be widespread at that time, the number of non-drinking and non-smoking young men in town ought to be large enough to give Ludlow a world-wide reputation for the conduct of its youth.

But the grand prize is still a century off. The third $1000, invested at 3½ per cent, will in June of the year 2174, when the time comes for its distribution, amount to the stupendous sum of $10,193,196, increasing more than ten thousand fold from the original sum. The number of virtuous young men and worthy poor that can be provided for with this great fund would be enough to make a respectable-sized city.

More than this, the town's benefactor has provided for perpetual and annual prizes for the best pupils in the public schools, annual relief for the poor of the town, independently of the distribution of the large funds, annual assistance in the support, maintenance and repair of the First Congregational Church of Ludlow, and the payment of the pastor's salary.

A DENIAL

Mr. Ladd Contradicts False Rumor

THE rumor circulating to the effect that lots in Ladd's Addition were being sold only under a ninety-nine-year lease is entirely untrue. There is not and never has been the slightest foundation for the report.

We have never in the past entertained such a scheme, nor will we consider any proposition to lease lots in Ladd's Addition.

A full Warranty Deed, as well as a complete abstract, is given to the purchaser of every lot.

Lots can be purchased on the installment plan, with easy payments and interest at six per cent.

Every deed will convey an absolute title, with no restrictions or reservations, excepting only those Building Restrictions required to insure the best class of buildings.
