35,136 42,689 Was the daily average circulation of The Oregonian for the entire month of April. Was the average Sunday circulation for the month of April. These figures represent quality of circulation as well as quantity. In judging circulation, both quality and quantity must be taken into consideration, and The Oregonian has both of these important factors, which are so vital to an advertiser when buying newspaper space.

A casual investigation would prove the fact that in Portland and surrounding country, nearly everybody who reads at all, reads The Oregonian.

The only kind of circulation valuable to an advertiser is paid circulation, and that is what the above figures represent. The mere printing of papers distributed promiscuously to make a showing, is of no value to an advertiser.
