The Frakes also had their batting clothes on, and when the pitcher on the paths were there with the necessary clout to bring him home.

A DANGEROUS LICENSE. In most respects we have more than laws enough. We as a city and state are burdened with fool measures adopted in a hurry, and never enforced except for the persecution of some person or party or organization or business.

Mr. Wilde's record in this town is well known; more than that, it is his; in the opinion of the Peoples Press any man with red blood in his veins would be wild who had the provocation Mr. Wilde had.

Mr. Wilde has brought new capital and new methods of enterprise, and interested new agencies of vast importance in the progress of Portland. So long as mere personal spite indites attacks against him, he or any other man of his standing and power for good to the community need not worry about the feeling all Portland will have in the matter, or the credence Portland will give to the character assassins.
