JOHN DOE WARRANT OUT

Authorities Feel Certain Mystery Is
Solved—Expect Arrest of Guilty
Man at Any Moment—Is Thought to Be in City.

Arrest of the thug who butchered Nathan Wolff and plundered Wolff's pawnshop at 195 First street last Friday night, is expected within a short time by the Portland police. As the result of clues discovered yesterday the police believe they have ascertained who the murderer is. They are sure that one man perpetrated the hideous crime and that the man is in the city, unless he has escaped within the past 26 hours.

The name of the suspect is necessarily withheld. But so confident were the detectives of being on the right trail that an officer was sent to the District Attorney's office to request a warrant for John Doe, as it was not intended to take any chance of letting the man's name get out prematurely.

Laundry Marks Differ.

The laundry marks differed from those on the collar, but that did not spoil the clew, for a man such as the one under suspicion is given to the use of aliases. Therefore he might have had his shirt dried out under varying aliases at different times. The conflict in laundry marks, on that assumption, was regarded more as a confirmation of the suspicions of the police, when the name of the owner of the shirt was secured from a local laundry.

The laundry marks on the collar found after the murder told nothing. Half a dozen such marks were in use in the city. But the shirt at once gave a genuine clew. It was found to belong to a man of desperate habits, and further investigation developed that this same man has been strangely missing from his accustomed haunts during the past few days. That the fellow did not leave the city immediately after the murder was learned definitely during the afternoon.

Late yesterday afternoon and again last night the police were kept busy tip as to where the suspect might be in hiding was secured. Detective Tichenor went to the District Attorney's office and secured the warrant for the man's arrest. Five minutes after doing this, Tichenor denied it. It was denied at the District Attorney's office, at the police station and by every one connected with the case. However, it is definitely known that the warrant was issued and that the officers expected to serve it last night.

Investigate Many Clews.

Clews innumerable have been given over to the police to unravel. Half a dozen clews were secured yesterday, some of them absurd, but all demanding investigation. Early yesterday morning an East Side clothesman reported having received a blood-stained coat vest with instructions from a "suspicious" appearing man to remove the stains at once. Detectives were sent out post haste that they found that the owner of the clothes had engaged in a fist fight with an acquaintance Saturday night and had got much the worse of the affray, as evidenced by his coat and vest.

Get No Information.

The inspection of the premises failed to reveal anything, the proprietors of the place being unable to say just who had occupied the rooms from the windows of which the shirt might have been tossed. Absence of stoves in the rooms made it necessary for the owner of the shirt to toss it from a rear window. Plainly it would be risky to leave the shirt in the room. It was deduced that the murderer ran down deserted First street after the murder, crossed over to the lodging-house on one of the dark thoroughfares north of the police station, got rid of the bloody shirt and possibly remained in the room over night.

Offers Large Sum for Capture and Conviction of Murderer.

SUFFOLK RESOLVES HOUSE Boston Mansion Where Ideas Bringing On Revolution Were Hatched.

Boston Globe. One of Boston's most important revolutionary acts in the old Vose or "Suffolk Resolves" house, at the Milton Lower Mills. This historic edifice, which stands on Adams street near the bridge, has of late years been slightly remodeled. A store has been made of one of the lower rooms and an L has been added to the general line of the original building can still be seen.

It was in this mansion, the home of Daniel Vose, often called the "birthplace of American liberty," that the famous "Suffolk resolves" were adopted, September 9, 1774, by the Suffolk convention.

The obnoxious regulating or reconstructive acts had not been long in operation before the popular resistance they encountered found expression in and reported to the convention by General Joseph Warren, who the next June lost his life in their defense at the battle of Bunker Hill.

These resolves, 19 in number, were by far the boldest doctrines ever adopted or promulgated in America, and probably did more than any one other thing to bring about the crisis, as soon as General Gage heard of their adoption, he sent to England for more troops and commenced his campaign of suppression of the rights of the people.

They resolved to break his compact with his subjects, to sever their allegiance, they arraigned as unconstitutional the repressive acts of Parliament, and rejected all officers appointed under their authority.

They directed collectors of taxes to pay over no money to the royal treasury. They advised the towns to choose a system of courts, and corresponding to town officers and corresponding committees. They earnestly advocated the well-known American principles of self-reliance, and the maintenance of the rights of the people.

They favored a Provincial Congress, and promised respect and submission to the orders of King George. They determined to act upon the defensive as long as reason and self-preservation would permit, but no longer.

They threatened to seize every crown officer in the province as hostages if the Governor should arrest any one for political reasons. They also arranged a system of couriers to carry messages to town officers and corresponding committees. They earnestly advocated the well-known American principles of self-reliance, and the maintenance of the rights of the people.

These resolutions were sent to the Continental Congress at Philadelphia by Paul Revere, where they were approved and passed as the basis of all political action; exported all persons disloyal from riots and all attacks upon the property of any person whatsoever; and urged their countrymen to "convince their enemies that in a contest so important, in a cause so solemn, their conduct should be such as to merit approbation from the brave and free of every age and country."
