Investigate Our Drug Department

Very careful service is necessary in preparing and compounding prescriptions. A mistake is often hard to rectify; sometimes even impossible. Very often mistakes are fatal.

We feel safe in saying that our registered drug force includes nearly twice as many men as are employed by any other retail drugstore in the city. The large prescription business we do makes it necessary to purchase new drugs continually, thus our stock is always pure and fresh.

As an additional safeguard we have perfected an absolutely reliable checking system, each prescription being double checked and registered before delivery.

When you have a prescription to be filled, phone us. We call for and deliver it promptly.

You will find everything in this store that is carried by any other first-class Drug Store, and a great many things besides

BEHIND SCENES AT CIRCUS

ACTORS USE POCKET MIRRORS IN MAKING UP.

Two Dressing-Rooms, One for Men and One for Women—Interesting Life of the Performers.

"Behind the scenes at the circus is a picture that thrills the heart," said J. H. Fitzpatrick, of the Greater Norris & Rowe circus, museum, menagerie and congress of nations, which will exhibit in this city next Monday and Tuesday afternoons and nights at the corner of Twenty-sixth and Raleigh streets.

"It is vastly different from behind the scenes at a theater. The dressing-rooms are marvels of interest. There are two of them—one for the women and one for the men.

"Each person has his trunk, but there is not the sign of a mirror other than the little pocket ones about the size of a silver dollar. Those who see the make-up of the riders, the acrobats and the dancing girls, with their paint and powder put on at just the right angle, their eyes penciled as perfectly as Della Fox would wish, their dainty garments hooked and given the finishing pats, would be astonished to see how little space they do it all in, and wonder at the perfection without a mirror, when the average woman can scarcely put on a pair of gloves away from a looking-glass.

"While women sit around in riding dresses, others change from one costume to another, hanging their clothes on a line of rope. Ropes run all around the dressing-room tent and trunks take the place of closets.

"There is only the soft grass for a carpet, and in rainy weather all use rubber boots while making up.

"Strange to say there is no smell of cigarette smoke in the dressing-rooms of the circus, as there is in the dressing-rooms of the theater. There is joking and good fellowship, and the line of 'class' is less severe than in the theater, graded by the salaries paid.

"All the performers eat in the dining tents of the Hotel Norris & Rowe, but sleep in the Pullman cars of the show or at the hotels when more than one-day stands are played.

"Whole families work together under one tent. One woman who has three daughters with the circus was asked as she put on top boots for an 'act' what held performers to the circus.

"Oh, the music and the smell of the sawdust," she said. There are over 200 men and women acrobats, aerialists, riders, etc., with the Norris & Rowe circus, and that requires considerable space for a dressing-room alone."
