STRAWBERRIES have been getting steadily better in quality and lower in price, 2 boxes for 25 cents now being an average figure, with choicer ones at 15 and 20 cents a box, and less attractive ones at 10 cents. Raspberries and gooseberries have also made their appearance, the former 25 cents a box and the latter 25 cents a pound. The English "gooseberry tart" has a reputation almost equal to that of the American apple pie, but the berries there are larger and do not call for so much patience in "topping and taling" as do the smaller ones we have. The raspberry, on the other hand, seems to have been specially designed to meet the busy American housekeeper.
Cherries are still small and cost 25 cents a pound, but pineapples are rather cheaper just now, judging from some fairly large ones I saw at 25 cents each. Some one recently told me of a fruit salad composed of strawberries, shredded pineapple and blanched and sliced new Brazil nuts, served in the pineapple shell. I cannot speak of it from personal experience, but my informant said that it was good.
Celery is rapidly passing, to the grief of those who use it freely as a "diller" in chicken and other meat salads; but there are good green peas to be had that can be used for similar purposes, and plenty of head lettuce and other nice fresh things. Some people use raw chopped cauliflower in salads when celery falls, considering it more sweet and more delicate than the cabbage which others fall back on. There are very good cauliflowers to be had just now for 15 cents. An admirable vegetable, the cauliflower, and worthy of its title, "the white rose of the kitchen garden."
There are tiny new Summer squashes coming in, from which attractive entrees can be made by stuffing them in various savory ways. The tomato and shrimp combination with squash, known as "squash a la creole," is one that specially appeals to me, and there are rather similar concoctions with crab meat or minced chicken or veal that also is good. This kind of squash costs 20 cents a pound at present. Tomatoes are 25 cents a pound. New green lima beans, 25 cents, and string beans, 20 cents a pound.
Asparagus is still good and costs 10 to 12 1/2 cents a pound. A pretty way of serving cold asparagus with mayonnaise is to pass the bunch of stalks through a ring of green pepper; but peppers are still "high," selling at 2 for 25 cents.
Shad is plentiful and shad roe is 25 cents a pound just now. Potted shad roe makes a handy and delicious sandwich filling. There is good sturgeon at 15 cents, salmon, croppies and cat fish being the same price. Black-cod, rock cod and halibut are 12 1/2 cents, sea trout, 25 cents; black bass, 25 cents, and perch and herring, 10 cents a pound.

Poultry prices are the same as last week.

ASK FOR WRIT OF REVIEW

Property-Owners Object to Method of Grand-Avenue Improvement.

Property-owners on Grand avenue have united in a petition to the Circuit Court asking that the City of Portland, by City Auditor Barbur, be directed to submit a writ of review for the improvement of Grand avenue from East Stark street to East Oak. The petition sets forth that in October, 1905, the City Council attempted to start proceedings to fill the gulch with earth instead of putting in a steel or concrete bridge. It was estimated that this would cost $15,000. Now that the work has been completed it has been discovered that the cost is $15,900. The Council, it is asserted, attempted to cure the evil by reassessment proceedings. This, it is alleged, cannot be done while the first assessment still stands, as the Council thereby acts in a double judicial capacity. The ordinance to which objection is made is No. 17,719, which the Council attempted to pass April 12, 1908.
The property-owners whose names appear on the petition filed in the Circuit Court yesterday are: George J. West, S. E. Cobb, Carrie Nicholas, John J. Kadderly and Mary Beakey.

East Side Children Will Parade.

Superintendent Bigler has informed President C. A. Biglow, of the East Side Business Men's Clubs, that the Board of Education will not permit the athletic drill on Multnomah Field to interfere with the children's parade on the East Side. He said the athletic performance would be postponed, if necessary, and the teachers who had offered to assist Professor M. M. Ringler in drilling the children would be free to do so. Teachers and pupils interested in the East Side parade may drop out of the Multnomah Field affair.

New Fly-Casting Records.

NEW YORK, May 15.—Three world's records were claimed by the members of the Angler Club of New York in their third annual fly and bait-catching tournament at the Harlem meet in Central Park. Dr. R. Johnson held, at his first cast with a quarter-ounce bait covered a distance of 141 feet, at his second a distance of 159 feet, and his last of the five tests netted him 161 feet. The previous American record for amateurs was 131 feet 6 inches, made out doors, and 157 feet for professionals made indoors. Ed Rice made a cast of 142 feet on his second attempt.

The salmon fly-casting championship for distance was won by W. M. Pievina, of Northamptonshire, England, who cast 129 feet, supplanting the old record of 120 feet. The professional record was increased to 140 feet by E. J. Mills from 124 feet 8 inches.
