JEWISH FREE LOAN SOCIETY.—At the annual meeting of the Jewish Free Loan Society, held yesterday in the Hall-Street Synagogue, the following officers were unanimously re-elected: President, M. Ostrow; first vice-president, M. Rein; second vice-president, J. Bromberg; secretary, I. Swett; treasurer, Ben Selling; directors, Dr. Jonah B. Wise, Rev. R. Abrahamson, Dr. A. Tilzer, D. Solis Cohn, D. Nemerofsky, J. Dautoff, H. Goldstein, A. Fleishman and M. Wax. The report of the treasurer showed that the finances of the organization are in a satisfactory condition and that it has been able to benefit a larger number of persons during the past year than at any time in its history. It is proposed to inaugurate a campaign in the near future to secure a larger membership and thereby enlarge the scope of the society. The organization was established for the purpose of assisting members of the Jewish community to provide for themselves. It numbers among its members many of the most prominent Hebrews in the city.

TALKS OF TILLAMOOK'S FUTURE.—A. J. Cohn, for a day or two a guest at the Oregon Hotel and who has been engaged in mercantile business at Tillamook for a number of years, said yesterday that he had decided to transfer his business connection to Portland and will soon come here to take up his residence. In referring to Tillamook, he had much to say in regard to the excellent opportunities offered in that locality and spoke in the highest terms of the prospective development of Tillamook county. He was not sanguine over the early establishment of a steamer line from Portland to Tillamook, and intimated that the business men of the Coast town will have to get along with one steamer until the Lytle road is opened. Concerning the railroad, he said, nothing is being done in construction work at present, in or about Tillamook.

CLUBS WILL MEET TONIGHT.—The Montavilla Board of Trade will hold a meeting tonight to consider the matter of assessing two blocks on each side of Villa avenue to pay for the widening of the street and also to take up the question of improving six streets between the Base Line road and Villa avenue. Three of these streets will run east and west and three north and south. The principal streets will be selected for improvement. The Kenilworth Improvement Club will hold a social entertainment in the parlors of the Kenilworth Presbyterian Church tonight at 8 o'clock. Mayor Lane and Whitney L. Boise will deliver short talks. There will also be music and recitations. The North Albina Club will meet in the engine-house on Albina avenue at 8 o'clock tonight for general business.

DEMOCRATS AT CARNIVAL.—The principal feature tonight of the Young Men's Carnival will be the grand ball at 9 o'clock. Preceding the ball there will be a Democratic rally. Among the speakers will be Mayor Lane, District Attorney Manning, Tom Word and E. S. J. McAllister. The Ancient Order of Hibernians will attend the carnival in a body. Tomorrow night in the auditorium there will be an amateur boxing and wrestling match. This has been sanctioned by the Amateur Athletic Union. This promises to be the most important event of the carnival. The Catholic Order of Foresters will attend in a body. On Wednesday night a Republican rally will be held, when prominent Republicans will be present and deliver addresses.

MEETS IN ST. JOHN.—By invitation of the St. John Commercial Club, the Peninsula Rose Festival committee will meet tonight in the clubrooms in St. John to complete plans to maintain rose booths during the Festival, one at the Union Depot and one at the Forestry building. All members of the executive committee are urged to be present, and as many others as can make it convenient to attend.

CONCERT FOR SAILORS.—The Portland Seamen's Friend Society's concert will be given on Tuesday night of this week, instead of Monday, out of courtesy to the Empire day concert to be given tonight at the Armory. The concert tomorrow night will be in charge of the Fourth Presbyterian Church. All friends of the society will be gladly welcomed.

TO CAMPAIGN IN COOS.—Rev. Clarence True Wilson, of Centenary Methodist Church, left last night after delivering his sermon for Coos County, where he will take part in the local option fight in progress in that county. He will be absent through the coming week, and will return Saturday.

C. W. ROSS AT THE Y. M. C. A.—C. W. Ross, editor of the Gospel Record, the denominational paper of the Plymouth Brethren, spoke at the Y. M. C. A. men's meeting yesterday afternoon on "The Death of Christ." He comes to Portland from Kansas City, Mo., and is delivering a course of lectures at the Gospel Chapel in Portland.

DO IT TODAY.—If you can't come down town to buy your meat today, we want you to weigh up the meat your butcher sends you and compare the cost with Smith's prices. The overcharge will astonish you. And then remember that Smith's meats are the best and freshest in town. Read Smith's ad—back page. •

G. A. R. AT FIRST CONGREGATIONAL.—The G. A. R. posts of the West Side attended the memorial services at the First Congregational Church last night. Dr. Luther R. Dyott, the pastor, delivered an appropriate sermon.

DIES IN WALLA WALLA.—Herbert R. Rosch died in Walla Walla Hospital, May 24. The body has arrived in Portland and the funeral will be held this week. He was born in Milwaukie, Or., and was 23 years old.

REPUBLICAN RALLY! Republican Rally! Tonight, Hunter's hall, East Thirty-fourth and Yamhill street. Good speakers and music. •

FORFEIT ITS CLAIM

East Side Land Safe From State.

SUIT WILL BE DROPPED

Proebstel Heirs, However, Are Still Fighting Attempt to Register Portion of Valuable Tract Under Torrens Law.

Title to 140 acres of valuable land on the East Side, claimed by the state, probably will not be distrubed, as the result of the recent application of D. G. Leitch, owner of one of the lots, to register title to his property under the Torrens land act. When Leitch made this application, the proceeding was resisted by Frederick, Jacob and Julius Proebstel, heirs of the original owner of the land. At the same time Attorney-General Crawford, for the state, interposed a motion demanding that Leitch make his application more definite and certain. This being overruled, the Attorney-General gave notice that he would institute escheat proceedings to convert the entire property, of which the Leitch lot was a part, to the state. But from correspondence that has passed between Attorney-General Crawford and H. B. Nichols, attorney for Leitch, it is probable the state, after investigating the facts, abandoned its efforts to get possession of the land for benefit of the state school fund.

The land involved in the pending controversary consists of the north half of the Wendel Proebstel donation land claim. It includes that part of the city west of Union avenue, between Morris and Freemont streets and extending nearly to the Willamette River. This tract was sold in 1879 at about $25 an acre. Aside from improvements the land is now worth about $15,000 an acre or an aggregate value of over $2,000,000.

The Wandel Proebstel claim consisted of 281.26 acres and is now cut into lots and blocks and most of it is densely populated. Mr. Proebstel and his first wife, Jane, settled on the land about 1853. Mrs. Proebstel died in 1866 and her husband, in 1868, married Elizabeth Fry. The patent was issued August 20, 1871, granting to Wendel the south half and to his deceased wife the north half. They had no children, neither did the second wife. Proebstel died in 1874, leaving Elizabeth, his second wife, surviving. In 1875 the state, by H. Y. Thompson, Prosecuting Attorney for this district, and George H. Durham and W. W. Page, special attorneys, brought an action to have the north half escheated.

The first Mrs. Proebstel (Jane) was an Irish woman, and correspondence was then carried on with people in Ireland. Papers were found among the effects of Wendel Proebstel indicating that Jane had a brother, Thomas Chapman, and other relatives still living in Ireland. Their depositions were taken and state authorities were satisfied that the heirs were genuine and the escheat action was dismissed in November, 1875. Partition suit was then instituted between the heirs of Jane Proebstel (Thomas Chapman and others). In that suit the land was sold in parcels to different parties, Harvey A. Hogue buying a large tract, including the Leitch lot. This sale was made in 1879. C. W. Burrage, under appointment as referee, conducted the sale and distributed the proceeds. Judge Raleigh Scott represented some of the parties who were minors. Judge Catlin and Benton Killin conducted the proceedings.

Counsel for Leitch contends that the state has no valid claim to any of the tract, since a former attempt to escheat the property to the state was defeated by the appearance of legal heirs, and the partition and sale of the property for their benefit, and for the further reason that Leitch and practically all of the 1000 owners of property included in the tract can show 10 years' adverse possession, which has been held by the Supreme Court to be a good defense against the state as well as a private person. It is further contended by the legal representatives of owners of the land that the courts are not liable, after a deliberate abandonment of the property by the state for more than 30 years, to undertake to dispossess 1000 innocent purchasers of their homes.

In 1883, Mrs. Elizabeth Proebstel, Wendel's second wife, commenced an action to recover the property, contending that her husband inherited it from his first wife and that she (Elizabeth) inherited it from Wendel. Judge Deady decided the case against her, and 10 years later, 1893, she deeded the land to Frederick, Jacob and Julius Proebstel, and it is on the title so conveyed that these heirs are seeking to regain possession of the premises. With the state out of the contest, the controversy will revert to the validity of the claim of the three surviving heirs, who charge that the alleged Proebstel heirs of 1875 practiced fraud in order to secure the land. It is in this status that the case is now pending in the courts.

DAMROSCH AS A COMPOSER

Famous Conductor of the New York Symphony Has Done Fine Work.

Walter Damrosch, who will bring his splendid orchestra here June 3 and 4, has had such a busy life as conductor, organizer and lecturer that his talent for composition has not had much chance for display. He has, however, composed some fine things, among them being the opera on Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter" and a beautiful Manila "te Deum," which he wrote in honor of Dewey's victory. Then, too, there is the tremendously popular "Danny Deever." One of Damrosch's friends tells the following story as illustrative of the genius for composition and for learning something from every sound in nature, which Damrosch possesses.

"We were walking through the woods one day when suddenly Walter seized my arm with a 'hush,' as he pointed to a big beetle droning away at our feet. 'I wished to hear how its note would die away,' he explained in answer to my look of inquiry. One day the following Winter he played for me the superb passage in the "Scarlet Letter" where the 'cello modulates in the chord of the seventh of the descending scale from B minor to F sharp minor, 'there is the beetle of our walk last Summer,' he said."

Damrosch and his fine orchestra will give three orchestral concerts here at the Armory, Wednesday evening, June 3, and Thursday afternoon and evening, June 4, under the direction of Lois Steers-Wynn Coman.

WANTS NO SEAVIEW SALOON

But Writer Thinks That Citizens Would Welcome a "Liquor House."

SEAVIEW, Wash., May 23.—(To the Editor.)—Last Tuesday, The Oregonian printed an account of a protest against the proposed establishment of a saloon here. W. M. Ladd and T. B. Wilcox were mentioned as conducting the fight.

Persons of such great wealth as those named are putting themselves in the wrong position by their attitude in this matter. Of course, they do not care a straw if taxes are high and the city in need of more revenue.

They can afford to pay high taxes and are not particularly anxious to see their property increase in value, for they do not care to sell. The trouble is, they fail to consider the fact that everyone who owns property here is not so "well fixed;" that some of us want to see the city advance and cannot afford to pay high taxes; and that we are not wealthy enough to close our city to a man who will undoubtedly bring more people here than have ever come before. Their view is a selfish one. They wish to be "exclusive" but fail to figure the cost of their course—to others.

Knowing the people of Seaview as I do, I feel sure that they would never allow a disorderly saloon to do business here, but that they would welcome a properly conducted liquor-house.

Mr. Ladd and Mr. Wilcox no doubt have the best of intentions, but they are now meddling in other people's business.

NEED OF NATIONAL GUARD

COLONEL JACKSON SPEAKS FOR ARMORY BILL.

Declares That Financial Support for the Militia Is Duty of Every American Citizen.

Need of an efficient and adequate trained soldiery for use in case of possible international complications is the strongest argument for the Army appropriation bill to come before the voters June 2, in the opinion of Colonel James Jackson, U. S. A., retired. Colonel Jackson has made the following statement in support of the measure:

The National Guardsmen of this state feel that they are entitled to armories for the care and protection of the arms and equipment furnished by the general Government, and bought by the state, and to provide a place for the drill and instruction in the military art of the men "liable to military duty," who volunteer to prepare themselves to defend, successfully, the people of the state and the Nation. An old Congressional enactment, carrying out a provision of the Constitution, made it incumbent upon every man liable to military duty to provide himself with a weapon and ammunition for it, and to undergo a certain amount of training, and that is the theory of this Government, that every elector, not exempt, is a member of the National Army and should fit himself to fight its battles as well as to vote for its laws and lawgivers. The militia act of 1903 repealed this law—which had fallen into desuetude—and adopted the National Guard of the states as a part of the military system of the country, to be supported, partly by the states and partly by the Nation, but it does not lessen the obligation of the elector to support, in some way, the military part of his Government.

The number of men liable to military duty has so increased that it is no longer advantageous to call them all to the standard, so the policy of the state and the Nation has been to provide for such volunteers as would agree to take the training required and to equip them with the necessary war material, provide places for its storage and for the training of these volunteers, who are simply doing what every non-exempt elector should do. The other electors are thus saved the time and sacrifices which the volunteers are willing to spend and make, and it is incumbent upon them to support and sustain, to the extent of their ability, those who are doing their work. There are about 100,000 men liable to military duty in this state. Less than 2000 of these men are taking military training. It is very little to ask of the other 98,000 that they give adequate support to the 1200 or 1500 men who are practically their substitutes. If they paid for these substitutes at the rates paid during the Civil War, the substitutes would be able to build their own armories.

The National Guard is now a National force, and its principal object is National defense. It is also a state force to quell riot and preserve order. Objection has been made to the National Guard by some persons illy posted, that its principal use was to interpose between labor and the corporations. This is not now, and in fact, never was true.

As the right arm of the Executive the militia may be used, under very carefully guarded regulations, to quell riot and maintain order, when, and only when, the constabulary is unequal to the task. To oppose the militia and its proper support, because it may have to do this, is to advertise one's self as against the reign of order and in favor of lawlessnes, in other words, to be a full-fledged anarchist. To such no argument can be addressed, for civilization depends upon the reign of law and order, and cannot exist without its enforcement. Anything else is barbarism, and the anarchist is always an incipient barbarian.

There are many good and intelligent people who really believe that if this country should be attacked the patriotic people "would rise in their might and drive the invader hence." Very good sentiment and patriotic poetry, but the practical patriot is liable to ask what they would do it with. Their hands and feet? Possibly; they certainly would not have much else if many of them "rise up," for the number of arms fit to fight a modern army with is very limited in this country, and it takes time to make them. It would take six months, with every factory in full blast, to arm and equip an army of 25,000 volunteers. In the meantime, what would the enemy be doing with the handful of regulars and trained militia—about 100,000 combatants altogether, and very much less at any given point. If this country is ever invaded it will be by a large and well-trained force—the best troops in the world. To put raw levies against such troops would be murder, and result disastrously. It would be a very expensive blunder.

It is singular how persistent is the idea that anybody with a gun will make a soldier, equal to any emergency, when there is not a line in history to warrant such an opinion; in every instance where raw levies have been pitted against regular or experienced troops, they have run away after a mere pretense at fighting. If you don't believe it, study your history. The greatest number of trained troops that could be put into the field, in an emergency, would be less than 100,000 men. What a pitiful army to defend an immense, rich and populous country like the United States of America, from humiliating defeat and incalculable loss. The Nation needs a thoroughly equipped and trained Army of at least 250,000 National guardsmen. This, with the standing army of 100,000 men, would give the country reasonable security until a volunteer army could be prepared. We have plenty of patriotic men, but a very limited amount of war material.

A wise electorate, in a people's country, which they expect the people to defend, would see to it that a sufficient number of the men liable to military duty to make a secure "equation of safety," received a thorough military training, and provide for them freely and cheerfully as a matter of insurance and national pride. Armories are an incentive to young men, especially in suburban towns, to take upon themselves the instruction and training to fit them for the whole duty of an American citizen, and are distinctly and unquestionably in the interest of mental, moral and physical culture, and of the best qualities of a responsible elector and a patriotic citizen.

Give us armories, and we who offer to shed our blood in your defense, when necessary to protect your homes and possessions, will turn you out better men and better citizens, will give the Nation better security against the predatory military powers of the world, a higher and more influential standing among the nations, and all in the interests of peace, for the strong man armed is seldom molested, and his word is law. This appropriation is particularly in the interest of laboring men. They are seeking to exclude cheap labor from this country, and an exclusion act entirely in their interest, is now before Congress for enactment. This law will inevitably produce international friction and perhaps war. It is to their especial interest to see to it that the Nation is fully prepared to defend the operation of this law and to protect them from the hordes of Orientals who would overrun this land if we fail to make good against Oriental opposition.

There are many other arguments in favor of armories, and of a large and well-equipped force of citizen soldiery, that space forbids us to use. Let patriotism and wise statesmanship, and not penuriousness, guide you in voting on the armory appropriation.

BY ARTHUR A. GREENE.

IT HAD been many weeks since I had had the satisfaction of watching a performance by the Baker company which completely satisfied the demands of the play, until yesterday afternoon, when that organization presented "Why Smith Left Home." The fact is, the stock company has not excelled yesterday's efforts during the present season, and that's considerable of a statement. It is rarely, indeed, that four members of a cast, each playing character parts, are able individually to make their characterizations features of a performance. It is seldom given to four actors to divide honors so evenly. It must be understood that the character parts are those which make "Why Smith Left Home" one of the most diverting farces one could wish to see.

These four big parts, Lavina, the cook-lady; General Billetdoux, Count von Guggenheim and Miss Smith, the ardent spinister, were played by Mina Crolius Gleason, Donald Bowles, James Gleason and Gertrude Rivers, respectively, as if they had been selected after a competitive examination. Their interpretations were as nearly flawless as it is well for anybody to give, unless he wants to work himself to death studying detail. How they did it in less than a week is one of those mysteries of dramatic stock. It is difficult to shade any considerable degree of difference in their work, although Mrs. Gleason would probably be given the first prize if they were entered in a competition. Donald Bowles would probably take second money, while Miss Rivers and "Jimmy" Gleason would have to cut the cards for next honors.

In addition to the quartet named, those whose work may be safely described as brilliant, Howard Russell, as the young bridegroom, with many troubles, and Maribel Seymour, as the "touching" maid, were capital; George Allison and Miss Jewel were satisfactory and William Gleason and Louise Kent pleased their audience in their respective parts. The settings are very pretty and the ladies dress their parts well. There is a laugh almost every minute during the progress of the show and as a dissipator of sorrow I feel perfectly safe in recommending "Why Smith Left Home" to all theatergoers. There will be the usual performances during the week.

Musical Comedy at the Star Theater

WITH half the programme vaudeville and the other half vaudeville, with a sprinkling of what is printed as a musical farce, patrons of the Star Theater yesterday at a matinee and two evening shows ought to have felt satisfied with the investment necessary to pass the doorkeepers. Whether they were satisfied with the various entertainments probably can be determined by the reception given the company.

Most if not all the vaudeville acts "got a hand," and the farce gave the Armstrongs and the chorus a chance to raise a laugh. There is little connection between the singing parts and the farce, the former being introduced at random. Fair audiences attended the performances.

Today the vaudeville numbers will change to Wilfred and Lottie, equilibrists, and a sketch by Raechel Acton, Kolville & Company entitled "The Nightingale." The musical farce, "Sweethearts and Wives," with one scene in the home of Patrick Summers and the other in a police station, will continue through the week. Ethel Davis, Magdaline Holly and Ruby McIntyre contribute the solo numbers.

WILL MEET IN EUGENE

Programme for Western Division of Teachers' Association.

The annual meeting of the Western division of the State Teachers' Association will be held in Eugene on June 25, 26 and 27. The programme is being prepared by the executive committee and the presidents of the special departments. Besides the regular grammar-school departments, which consist of the primary, intermediate and advanced sections, the association maintains a department of music, a department of supervision and a department of secondary and higher education.

The officers having charge of the programme have secured the services of Ellwood P. Cubberly, of Stanford University; Albert Bushnell Hart, of Harvard University; Edward Hyatt, State Superintendent of Public Instruction of California, and A. C. Nelson, Superintendent of Public Instruction of Utah. Miss Effie B. McFadden, of the San Francisco Normal School, will give special instruction in primary methods. The programme will provide for four sectional periods and ten general lectures.

The citizens of Eugene, through their Commercial Club, are preparing to give the teachers a royal reception. The following Eugene local committees have been appointed: Committee on entertainment, L. R. Alderman, G. W. Hug, Cora Wold, Maude Gallogly, Fannie Millican; reception committee, W. B. Dillard, Ida Patterson, Emma Chase, W. C. Lyons, E. R. Parker. The annual business meeting will be held on Friday morning, June 25, at which time the standing committees will submit their reports and the president will deliver the annual address.
