THE OMELETTE SOUFFLE.

It's Not the Number of Copies Printed, It's the Number Sold—Results Count.

There is a vast distinction between distribution for the sake of increasing the circulation figures and distribution for the sake of increasing the number of advertising responses. There is a difference between street sales at hours when the reader has but scant opportunity to look through the scare heads and street sales when the reader is either going to or returning from his home.

There is a difference between a circulation which strikes the same reader several times in the same day and the circulation which does not repeat the individual.

You've got to weigh and measure all these things when you weigh and measure circulation figures. It isn't the number of copies printed, but the number of copies sold—not the number of papers distributed, but the number of papers distributed in near-enough territory—not the number of readers reached, but the number of readers who have the price to buy what you want to sell—that determine the value of a circulation to you.

You can take a single egg and whip it into an omelette souffle which seems to be a whole plateful, but the extra bulk is just hot air and sugar—the change in form has not changed the amount of egg substance—it's the substance in circulation, just as it is the nutrition in the egg that counts.

The Oregonian's circulation is all nutrition—every copy is of value to the advertiser.
