ENLARGE POLICE QUARTERS

DETECTIVES MOVE TO WORCESTER BUILDING.

First Addition to Central Station at Second and Oak in Thirty-six Years.

Quarters for Portland's detective force have been secured in the Worcester building, Third and Oak streets, directly adjoining police headquarters on the west. It is the first enlargement of the city's police headquarters for 36 years.

Thirty-six years ago Portland had a population estimated at between 13,000 and 15,000. The city built the three-story building at Second and Oak streets for police headquarters, and with little alteration it has remained in use for that purpose during all those years. Then there was a force of officers of a dozen or more; now there are more than 140 men who wear uniforms; then there was an average of one or two prisoners a day; now the daily inmates of the City Jail average 24; at that time Municipal Court was held at irregular periods, whenever there were a sufficient number of cases on the docket or any cases demanding immediate attention, which warranted a session; in every department of the city now and enlarged quarters have been arranged, in many departments the space having been trebled and quadrupled. In the Police Department alone, there has been no increase, so far as space is concerned, since the days when Portland was a scattering village.

On the first floor of this small three-story relic of the village days of Portland are the Chief's office, City Jail, and captains' quarters. On the second floor are the rooms of Municipal Court, clerk's office and officers' quarters. On the third floor is the women's ward.

Until the removal of the detectives' quarters from the second floor a few days ago, patrolmen had no place to rest when off duty, and there was not even room for them to leave their uniforms when going off duty. Removal of detectives to the two rooms in the Worcester building makes one additional room at headquarters for the use of patrolmen.

"This building was erected 36 years ago," said Chief Gritmacher. "At that time it was rather a pretentious place for a police station of a city of Portland's size. Now the city has a population of considerably more than 200,000, and the station has to take care of a correspondingly large number of people. But we haven't an inch more room. The police is the only department of the city which has not been given more space."

Get Close to Nature

These warm Summer days beckon you to the mountains, to the fishing streams, to the sea shore. If you're going to remain in town, the next best thing is to get your meat as pure and fresh and sweet as Nature planned it. There's nothing artificial about Smith's meats; they're home-grown, city-dressed, sold fresh. They taste so different and are far, far, cheaper than any ice-car meats brought to Portland by the Beef Trust.
