CANNON FIGHTING FOR POLITICAL LIFE

Speaker's Predicament Shows Presidential Boom Howling Farce.

ROOSEVELT GOOD JUDGE

Knew Rank and File Did Not Want Cannon-Refuses to Tell Where He Got Wealth and Is Suspected.

OREGONIAN NEWS BUREAU, Wash-Ington, Sept. 31.-Viewed in the light of recent events, Speaker Cannon's late Presidential poom becomes a howling farce. Here is a man who three months ago was prociaimed by many politicians to be the strongest possible candidate the Republican party could nominate to lead the fight against W. J. Bryan. To-day Mr. Cannon is fighting, as he never fought before, for re-election to the House of Representatives, and each succeeding day his chance of election grows smaller.

And yet had the reactionaries gained control of the Chicago convention, the advice of President Roosevelt would have been set at naught, and it is quite probable that this same "Uncle Joe" would have been named, instead of W. I. Taft. Mr. Cannon represents the eactionaries; he is and has been anti-Roosevelt, and because of his very opposition to the Rooseveit policies, and because he has looked with unseeming favor upon special interests, he is threatened with political annihilation. If the church and labor interests have combined to prevent Mr. Cannon's re-election to the House of Representa-tives, how much more bitterly would they have opposed him in the country at large, had he, and not Mr. Taft, been named as the Republisan standard-bearer! The rejection of Mr. Cannon and the nomination of Mr. Taft is just one more tribute to the political saga-city of Mr. Roosevelt, than whom no man is closer to the people. Mr. Roose-velt was opposed to the nomination of Well was opposed to the nomination of Mr. Cannon because he knew the rank and file of the party did not want Mr. Cannon; because he knew Mr. Cannon would not be a true representative of the masses of the people, and because he was satisfied that other and better men could be found.

Once Idol, Now Suspected.

The church and labor, combining with the Democrats, may or may not be able to prevent Mr. Cannon's re-election to the House, but regardless of what takes place in the Elghteenth Illinois Congressional District, enough has transpired to demonstrate that Mr. Cannon is the heaviest handicap the Republican National ticket is carrying through this campaign. The very possibility that he may be re-elected Speaker of the House and again installed in the second highest office in stalled in the second highest office in the Nation, is a serious drawback to the Republican ticket; it is likely to cost Mr. Taft many votes. There are not a few voters who reason it out that, if Mr. Cannon was strong enough to block the reforms of Mr. Roosevelt he will be strong enough to do the same with Mr. Taft, and among church-men and laborers there is no slight sentiment in favor of wiping Mr. Cfinnon off the Governmental checker-

Only a few years ago Joseph G. Can-non was an idol among the people; he was an idol in the House of Represenmon was an idol among the people; he was an idol in the House of Representatives. He was then pictured as a rugged, honest, faithful old statesman, to whom the Republican party was deeply indebted. Today his honesty has been questioned; he is branded as a traitor questioned; he is branded as a traitor to the people; a hindrance to the better element in his own party, and altogether one of the most "undesirable citizens" in the Republican fold. No longer is he an idoi; he has become an object of suspicion and condemnation. Like some of New York City's most notorious political bosses, Mr. Cannon has been shown to be a wealthy man, and like them he is continually confronted with the question.

to be a wealthy man, and like them he is continually confronted with the question: "Where did you get it?"

Mr. Cannon refuses to tell how much he is worth, but it is no secret that he has a tremendous fund of resources upon which he can draw. He may have acquired this wealth honestly, but it has been intimated that he came by some of it in at least a questionable way, and it is up to him to explain. Mr. Bryan asked him to explain and he dodged the question. He has been repeatedly asked to explain, always with the same result. His very refusal to take the public into his confidence has given impetus to the his confidence has given impetus to the rumor that he has acquired wealth by means peculiar to disreputable politicians, and this stigma will stick unless Mr. Cannon comes forward with some explanation. Perhaps this is a purely personal matter the concerns only Mr. Cannon matter that concerns only Mr. Cannon, but the prominence that has been given the charge rather makes it incumbent upon him to lay bare some of his per-sonal affairs in order to regain public confidence that has been lost.

Where Did He Get It?

The charge of corruption in politics, if The charge of corruption in politics, it supported by any sort of tangible evidence, is apt to prove barmful in these days of reform. Here is Mr. Cannon accused of amassing a large fortune, while holding his place in Congress. He could not have made it out of his salary, he did not inherit it, and it is doubtful if his banking interests would not him any his banking interests would net him any such amount as he is supposed to possess. When these things are considered and the average voter recalls that the Speaker has been a staunch friend of the railroads and an equally staunch friend of the brewers and distillers, it takes little stretch of the imagination to satisfy, the aforesaid average voter that Mr. Cannon must have been on intimate terms with some of the leading corporation men of the Nation. This suspicion may or may not be just, but Mr. Cannon refuses to be frank, and his very refusal in a campaign gives color to report. Such been the Republican

POLICEMAN IS MURDERED

(Continued From First Page.) Young for instance, though on duty and supposed to be patrolling his best, was unarmed. scout the idea that he was hated so bit-terly that an enemy would follow him into a brilliantly lighted saloon, ignorant of the number of occupants, and shoot him.

Woods related the story of the crime in detail to the detectives and officers who were dispatched from headquarters as soon as a report of the murder was received. As a result of his account of the crime officers are scouring the city for clues of the unknown murderer. Young's private life will be investigated thoroughly to ascertain, if possible, whether he had had recent trouble with any one or whether any one bore a grudge against him.

At the same time they are pursuing or whether any one hore a gradge against him.

At the same time they are pursuing an entirely different line of investigation. They are anxious to learn why young went into the saloon while on duty, for during all his years of service he was not known to break a rule of the department. They also are desirous of ascertaining why he was unarmed while on duty. Every officer is supposed to bear arms while patrolling his beat, but when the body of the murdered officer was searched as it lay on the saloon floor, there was no weapon of any kind on his person.

Coroner Soon Reaches Scene. The ball that caused the officers death

The ball that caused the officers death was a 8c caliber of a special make. One of the balls went wild and found its way into the wall where it imbedded itself and was removed by the officers.

Coroner Norden was notified as soon as the police arrived, and the body of the dead officer was left where it lay until his arrival. He reached the scene soon after the murder, and the body was removed.

Was removed.

"Officer Young had just come into my place through the front door," said Woods to the officers, "and had been inside only a few moments when the rear door was opened. I started back toward the door to see who it was, and as I had crossed about half the distance to the door an unknown man entered. He carried a revolver in his hand and wore a white cloth with two holes in it across his face.

"He brushed me aside and walked toward the officer. "Come on, he said to Young. T've got you now!" and with to Young. Twe got you now! and with that he fired. The officer turned, but I don't think the first shot hit him. Then the fellow fired twice again, and the officer dropped to the floor, dead. He turned quickly and went out the rear door and escaped. I have no idea who he was, but he must have had a gradge against the officer."

Woods' Story of Crime.

Woods' Story of Crime.

Young, according to Woods, had been in the saloon only about three minutes when the assassin entered. On entering the place, Woods says the officer went into a side room and drank a glass of whisky. As he and Woods left the side room Woods seated himself near the stove, the officer standling beside him. Woods was turning a damper on the stove when he noticed the rear door open cautiously, then quickly close again. He immediately arose and started towards the door to investigate. As he did so the door was thrown violently open, and a masked man entered. He held a revolver in his hand and on his face he wore a white cloth with eyeholes. He leveled the weapon at the officer who was still standing near the stove. Brushing Woods aside, he approached within three or four feet of the officer.

"Come to me," he said, "I've got you this time and am going to kill you."

He fired three shots, the officer falling on the floor, then turned and retreated towards the door. Closing it behind him he disappeared in the darkness. It was then that Woods called for help.

Sergeant Baty assumed charge of the investigation and upon searching the body of the dead officer it was found that he was unarmed. An officer was immediately sent to his residence and there it was learned that he had left his revolver at home when he went on duty last night.

Hat and Mask Found.

Hat and Mask Found.

At midnight searchers in the neighbor-hood found a hat and mask which had evidently been lost by the murderer in his flight. They were found on Multno-mah street, a block distant from the scene of the murder. It was a light-colored hat and the mask had two holes in it. They were found at the end of a path which runs through a vacant lot directly from the rear entrance to the saloon.

Bloodhounds were called and at an

About 20 years ago a fugltive murderer from Chicago, James Jordan, shot at Young from a carriage at First and Alder streets, the policeman approaching the carriage to arrest the fugitive. He was not hit, but in the excitement attending

It is believed by the officers as a re-sult of their investigations that an un-known enemy of Officer Young saw him enter the saloon and deliberately followed him there to murder him. No clew to the man's identity has been unearthed, but hopes of his ultimate capture with the aid of the dogs is entertained. Woods purchased the saloon three weeks ago. He is originally from Grants Pass where he conducted a saloon, and later moved to North Bend where he also con-ducted a hotel and saloon. His bartender was employed at the same place by the police force for more than a quarter of a century. He was one of the oldest men on the force, not only in point of service but also in years. He has always borne an excellent reputation, and is survived by a family.
