

MISSING GIRLS
FINDING IN CHICAGO

Mysterious Disappearance of Pearl Haviland Solved,
After Month's Search.

NEWS OVERCOMES FATHER

Fourteen-Year-Old Girl Who Dropped From Sight While on Way to School is Located
With Grandfather.

GIRL TRACED TO CHICAGO.
Ruby Pearl Haviland, the 14-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George K. Haviland, 749 Roosevelt street, who mysteriously disappeared on the morning of September 16, while on her way to the Chapman school, was located last night by the Oregonian. The girl is in Chicago, whither she was taken from Portland. The mystery of the young girl's whereabouts completely baffled Portland police, city detectives and newspapers, all of whom exhausted every effort to find the child. It was not until all but the anxious parents of the girl had practically given up hope of finding her that the Oregonian took up the threads and last night, after a week's effort, solved the mystery.

Ruby Pearl Haviland has been found. The 14-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George K. Haviland, who dropped completely from sight the morning of September 16, after being seen by a schoolmate at Twenty-first and Thurman streets, and of whose whereabouts since she was baffling mystery, was located in Chicago last night through the efforts put forth by The Oregonian.

At present Pearl is in keeping of Patrick H. Tierney, her grandfather, and it is presumed that the family has not allowed the girl to communicate with her father here who has spent weeks of anxiety in the hopeless search to find some trace of his missing daughter.

Search Breaks Down Parent.
The welcome news of his daughter's whereabouts was conveyed to the father late last night while he was downtown still hoping against hope to find some clew of his loved one. For a week grief-stricken parents had roamed the streets of Portland, giving up an excellent position as an electrical engineer, to pursue the mystifying search.

During the first few days of the girl's strange and unaccountable disappearance, the father hunted hourly, denying himself food and sleep. Telephone calls, letters and messages poured into the Haviland home, all of them from friends, relatives and those whose interest had been aroused in the case through the publication of newspaper accounts. Advice and information of every conceivable kind, which might lead to a solution of the strange case, were offered. Messages were received from police all over the Northwest from interested ones who offered suggestions and even assistance to help the distracted parents in their trouble.

Entire City is Searched.
Of a large portion of these, Haviland took note, with the result that for a week he took practically no sleep. During that day he was with detectives and newspaper men and every suspicious house in Portland and many outside the city's limits were searched and searched again. Within a week the nervous strain brought him to his bed where he remained nearly a week. Then, sick and exhausted, he again took up the search.

Newspapers and detectives, one after another gave up the case. The Oregonian became interested with the result that the case was investigated. He thought that his girl had been found. He was to overcome with joy to give any intelligible plan for the future.

Case Most Puzzling One.
Pearl Haviland's disappearance a month ago, is one of the most mysterious cases which has ever come to the attention of the Portland public. She was a pupil in the Chapman school, stood well in her classes and had the respect and admiration of everyone who knew her. She attended school promptly and regularly and had scores of acquaintances in the neighborhood and at school.

Wednesday morning, September 16, she set breakfast with other members of the family, kissed them good-bye and, after asking her father for money with which to purchase a tablet, left for school. That was the last seen of her by her parents.

Every Clew Hunted Down.
From that time up to the present, Pearl Haviland's whereabouts have been veiled in mystery. She dropped from sight as completely as if engulfed in mid-ocean. Every possible clew was hunted down, and every avenue through which it was thought possible the girl could have disappeared, was searched. Every vacant house, room, barn and thicket within a radius of several miles of the Haviland home, where the distressed parents thought it possible that the body of their daughter would be found, was visited. Theories and clews advanced by city detectives at work on the case likewise failed of their purpose, as did nearly every other suggestion offered during the past month.

Tierney Seeks to be Guardian.
Once the girl's whereabouts became known telegraphic communication was established with the authorities in Chicago, with the result that dispatches last night conveyed the information that a petition to the Probate Court had been filed, asking that the girl's grandfather, Patrick H. Tierney, be appointed her guardian, and that the girl herself was safe in relative's hands.

held of his daughter's whereabouts, by explaining the reasons why the grandparents would act as they have. "Pearl is a daughter by my first wife," he said. "At the time of my marriage to the present Mrs. Haviland, the Tierneys were anxious to adopt the girl. Soon after she was born the grandparents had her baptized in the Catholic church and gave her the name of Margaret, but afterwards I had her christened in a Protestant church as Ruby Pearl, although we have always called her by her middle name."

Sought Custody of Child.
"A few times during the past year the Tierneys have requested the custody of the child, but she never evinced any desire to go to them although I had always told her that any time she changed her mind I would provide her with a ticket to make the journey. But she always demurred. She had not seen her grandparents since she was a child two or three years old. I am too happy to know that she is safe and out of harm's way to lay any plans regarding my future acts."

Pearl Haviland was 14 years old in July, but is large and well developed for her age. She would easily pass for a girl two or three years older. It was this fact which led many to believe at the time of her disappearance that she had advanced to some youthful sweetheart, and although the father took up every clew of this kind offered, and there were many of them, they only added to his sorrow and distress when one after another proved futile. "I was positive from the first that Pearl, who had never shown any attention to young men, had not run away to be married," said the father last night. "And the love we bore each other was such that I knew if she were any place it was possible for her to get to a telegraph station or write a letter she would communicate with me. Her silence, due to the fact in all probability that she was too closely guarded, only added to the agony of the situation. But I have the deepest and most profound thanks to offer The Oregonian for its successful effort in locating one whom I had almost given up as the victim of murder."

Bauer, the pianist, who begins his tour in the British Isles next January. Trials were given at both Queens Hall, London, and the Salle Gaveau, in Paris. The soloist finally selected was Miss Mary Adele Case, a young American girl from Portland, Or., who has only been studying two years in Paris. Miss Case is 23 years old, a tall, slim, black-haired girl with a rich contralto of unusual range.

FORMER OREGON CITY GIRL

Miss Case Sent Abroad to Study by Wealthy California Woman.

Mary Adele Case spent most of her life in Oregon City until five years ago, when she went to New York to study and spent two years there. She then returned to Portland and was heard in musical circles on many occasions.

Less than two years ago she went to Palo Alto, Cal. A wealthy woman of that city had a daughter with considerable musical ability and ambition, who unfortunately was blind. She desired to study abroad, but because of her physical infirmities, her mother declined to permit the daughter to go.

The mother, however, met Miss Case and, after learning of her desire to study abroad, readily consented to her daughter's trip, provided Miss Case would accompany the daughter. To the proposition Miss Case is said to have acceded and the two journeyed together to Paris, where they since have been studying.

SCATTERS BROKEN LIMBS

POWDER EXPLOSION KILLS SIX IN COLORADO. Greek and Mexican Quarrymen Are Slain or Mangled—Nurse Describes Horrible Scene.

FORT COLLINS, Colo., Oct. 15.—Six men were instantly killed and 21 others injured by the explosion of a misused charge of dynamite at the Ingleside lime quarry, 13 miles from here, this afternoon. They are Greek and Mexican laborers. Foreman James McPherson is reported fatally injured. All the injured have been removed to the hospital at Fort Collins. The blast went off in the face of 40 men. Many of them were picked a distance of 300 feet and were hurled up dead or maimed. The explosion was heard for miles in every direction.

Ranchers and their wives rushed to the scene and gave succor to the injured. Mrs. William Booth, a trained nurse, who lives less than half a mile from the quarry, was one of the first to reach the spot. She described the scene as horrifying. The ground was strewn with men whose limbs were broken and their bodies cut and bruised.

Five charges of dynamite had been placed, but four of them only exploded. While an attempt was being made to pick the cap from the unexploded charge, it went off.
