People Shocked to Learn Beautiful Chateau Few Weeks Ago Would Have Been Destroyed Had Flames Spread.

BY A. W. LAMOREUX.

PARIS, Nov. 6.—(Special.)—It seems to have suddenly dawned on the official mind that a public museum like the Louvre, or an historical chateau like that of Versailles might be liable to burn down as well as an ordinary citizen's residence.

A hint to this effect was given to those who are in charge of these national treasures hours of art by an incident fire at Versailles a few weeks ago, and a strong hint was given immediately afterwards by the burning down of the telephone building.

The fire which broke out in the chateau at Versailles was quickly extinguished immediately put out by the guards, who happened to have noticed it in time, but then the question arose, what would have happened if the fire had acquired some headway?

People were shocked to learn that the beautiful chateau, with its immense treasures of art, would be completely at the mercy of the flames.

The under secretary for fine arts has had a talk with all keepers of the public museum, and asked them to hand in a report as to the requirements of their institutions to protect them against fire.

PASSING OF THE YANKEES

Few of the Real Stock Left Around New England.

New York Herald. Recent census investigations, together with the result of genealogical researches, have brought to light the surprising fact that the real Yankee is fast disappearing.

As a result of the census, the original stock of the first white settlers in New England is passing, with this difference, that what the Indian has been eliminated the Yankee is being absorbed.

Abroad, particularly in England, the custom still holds of referring to all Americans as Yankees, and this accounts for the survival of a term which will soon have no real application.

On Cape Cod, indeed, the Yankee is still to be found. It was there that the first settlers of the New England colony made their homes.

It was at Provincetown that the Pilgrims landed nearly three centuries ago, and that the cape comes naturally by its Yankee stock.

These original Yankees took to the sea like young ducks, almost as soon as they were able to leave their mother's wing.

But Cape Cod has changed greatly in the last quarter of a century. Its sons no longer go to sea.
