RULE HARD TO GET

Representative Government in Germany Improbable.

EMPEROR HOLDS CONTROL

Nominates 17 Members of Bundesrath and Can Only Be Reached By Cutting Off Revenues, Which Require Reichstag Majority.

BERLIN, Nov. 23.—The debate in the Reichstag on the motions introduced by the Socialists and Radicals demanding changes in the constitution, which would make the Chancellor and Ministers responsible to Parliament and give the sole power to the Reichstag to declare war, will probably begin on December 2. The debate is expected to last one day, or two days at the most.

The advanced Liberals, whose aim is to convert the German political system into a government responsible to Parliament, do not anticipate much from the present Reichstag, because in the days when feeling ran the highest the party leaders would not agree to urge the simplest resolution of censure or inquiry. The Radicals and Socialists count upon making their first great campaign in the elections of 1912, unless the House is dissolved sooner.

The power of the associated monarchies forming the German empire is intrenched in two principal ways—in the Bundesrath, which has equal legislative powers with the Reichstag, and in the Conservative and Clerical parties, which have, under the ancient system of the Reichstag electoral districts, the means for holding the majority in that body by about one-third the votes cast.

The Bundesrath, which consists of 58 members appointed by the sovereigns of the states of Germany, except one each from Hamburg, Bremen and Luebeck, stands directly across the path of a government responsible to the elected representatives of the people.

The Kings, Grand Dukes, Dukes and Princes who rule the Federated States, also Ministers responsible to them alone, while willing to unite in limiting the freedom of initiative and speech on the part of the King of Prussia as Emperor, are one with him in their determination to resist representative government. Fourteen votes in the Bundesrath against any amendment to the constitution will suffice for its rejection. The Emperor, as King of Prussia, nominates 17 of the members, and as a consequence, there is no possible chance for the adoption of an amendment without his consent.

The Radicals and Socialists do not doubt that by cutting off the money appropriations they could in the end compel the monarch to grant a full representative government, but they must first command a majority in the Reichstag, and that seemingly is only possible through a prolonged and overwhelming agitation for a re-arrangement of electoral districts, so that the artisan classes in the industrial centers shall have equal ballot rights with the protected food-growing interests, which are opposed to a change.

There has been no change in the boundaries of the Reichstag constituencies since the Empire was formed. During the interval of 37 years, the populations have increased from 41,000,000 to 63,000,000. The weight of the population has shifted from the country to the town districts, hence it is possible for 34 per cent of the population to choose 56 per cent of the Parliament. The Conservatives elect a member with an average of 18,232 votes and the Socialists with an average of 75,971 votes, so that the political free-thinker, living in the trading and manufacturing centers, has a ballot co-efficient one-fourth that of the loyal peasant Monarchist.

The Socialists in 1907, polled 3,258,029 votes and have 43 members in the Reichstag; the Conservative parties, with 1,549,741 votes, have 85 members, and the Clerical center, with 2,145,698 ballots, have 104 members. Berlin, with a population entitling it to 12 seats, is permitted to elect only six members, while some of the other large cities are represented in a similar ratio.

ENGLISH PRESS CAUTIOUS

Few Papers Publish Emperor William's Century Interview.

LONDON, Nov. 23.—Few of the London morning papers comment on the alleged Emperor William interview which was suppressed by the Century Magazine. Some of them decline to publish extracts in any shape and severely deprecate their publication in the United States as being of extremely doubtful taste.

The Daily News and one or two other papers in editorials take the position that the Emperor, if he gave expression to the alleged sentiments, can only have done so in a moment of super-excitement, and, having since made amends, the publication can have no effect on the good relations of the English and German people.

Two Suspected of Gambling.

L. A. Roberts and Harry Martin, who live at the Gilman Hotel, were arrested last night by Sergeant Goltz and Patrolmen Maddox, Vessey and Leavens, who made a raid on suite 58 in this hotel for the purpose of stopping a gambling game reported to be conducted there. The officers found three exits from the rooms and that all players had disappeared except Roberts and Martin who are said to conduct the game. They found many bottles of beer and whiskey and numerous poker chips and cards. Both men have been arrested frequently in this same hotel on the same charge. Although the police secured no evidence of gambling last night, they took the two men into custody and charged them with vagrancy.
