During the afternoon Roy Morgan, who was out walking with Postmaster Wheeler, was followed by Ben Whalen and William Parrell. Some words were exchanged, when it is said Farrell simpped up and struck Morgan a blow in the face, remarking with an oath that there had been too many fines to pay in Battleground resently.

Admiral Schley's letter said in part: "I am wholly out of sympathy with critics who find nothing good in what exists and whose policy appears to be destructive rather than constructive I have watched this discussion in the press and periodicals with interest born of a lifetime of service in every class of shipping under the flag and I am satisfied that it proceeded from a spirit of ensoriousness' that overlooks the fact that no such thing as a perfect ship create one no more than it is possible to rente on, no more than it is possible to find a perfect man,

"I take exception to much of the ad verse criticism today because the fact is withheld that many of the miner defects adverted to were incidental to the time and type when those vessels were constructed, and they are common to a large percentage of the war vessels of every other power. But the inference sought to be established that our ships are inferior in their class to those in foreign navies is unfair, untrue and unpatriotic. One has only to glance over some of the foreign vessels to discover that there are some critics who seem think that all is not well in these matters on their side of the ocean. Only last Summer I met an Englishman who wanted to know all about this 'insurrection, as he called it, going on in the periodicals over our Navy. He volunperiodicals over our Navy. He volun-teered the information that we had the best ships in the world and it was a pity we did not know it."

Evans Denounces Injustice.

Admiral Evans' letter said in part: After an experience with our fleet ich few men have had. I am convinced that our ships, taken as a whole, are equal to or superior to those built by any other country. Of course, our first ships do not equal the last foreign ships, and no sane man would expect them to, but date for date of design they are the equals of any except in the case of our intest designed ships, where the groat superiority of ours is beyond question. "Our designs of the last few years show great advantages over anything proposed abroad. I have made it my business to study the recent criticisms of our Navy published in various maganines and papers, and I have no word with which to tell you how unjust, misleading and silly they are. If ever the results of the Newport conference become known, I think you will find that a majority of officers agree with me." same man would expect them to, but
