

WAVE OF FEASING AND THANKSGIVING

Portland People Will Observe Traditional Holiday in Traditional Way.

SPORTS ALSO A FEATURE

At the Various Homes for Depend- ent Persons are Well Provided With Good Things—Special Services in Churches.

BY LEONE CARL BARR.

This is the only day out of the 365 when the people turn from the arid and dried proposition of things as they are, with its worries and money-getting, money-keeping propensities, to think and ponder of things as they ought to be, and to give thanks for the manifold blessings that have come in the past 12 months.

Throughout all this big Portland, today Thanksgiving is being observed more fittingly. Scattered members of families have gathered round the festive board for their annual reunion— and those of us who haven't any festive board feed our faces at the restaurants.

How Day Will Be Observed.

In accordance with modern convention, the charitable and philanthropic institutions of the city are faring well and happily today. Services will be held in nearly all the churches. This afternoon comes one of the big football games of the season—the match between Multnomah and Oregon.
