HORACE A PRESS AGENT

Greek Bard Alleged to Have Boomed Vineyards.

BOSTON, Dec. 1.—Guglielmo Ferrero, the Italian historian, likened Horace, the Latin poet, to a modern-time press agent in a lecture before Lowell Institute last night. Horace, he said, adver-

the people great users of the beverage. During the course of his lecture he said:

"The odes of Horace were not written in striving for literary merit, but for a commercial reason. Vineyards and olive orchards in his time covered practically the whole of Italy, consequently the people were peaceful and did not want war; because war might injure those industries. To realize the position of Horace in his time, I may liken one of the poets of Europe of today writing a magnificent poem extolling the use of opium and the pleasures to be derived from that drug."

Twice a day he is taken in his wheel chair to the great bathroom, where he takes the steam cabinet bath and treatment. Dr. R. O. Dresser, the attending physician, is hopeful of continued improvement, although the progress so far made has not been very rapid.
