Three Yeggs Get Small Haul on East Side.

LOOT ONLY CHICKEN-FEED

Grocery-Store Robbed by Three Men in Melodramatic Style, and Crooks Get but $1.50 for Their Trouble.

One dollar and a half was the sum total of the plunder secured by three bold bandits who held up C. Hamilton and robbed his "Golden Rule" confectionery and grocery store, 314 East Seventh street, soon after 8 o'clock last night. One of the bandits wore a mask and was armed with a revolver, the other two being unmasked and apparently unarmed.

Aged Mr. Hamilton was in the little store alone at the time of the robbery. His son, daughter-in-law and three grandchildren were in the living apartments in the rear of the store. A lone young man, apparently 25 or 26 years of age, medium build and rather shabby in appearance, entered and wanted to buy cigarette papers. He was shown the papers and refused to buy; he then demanded five pennies for a nickel, and when the demand was complied with made further excuses to remain in the store for several moments.

After he had been there a brief time two other men, evidently confederates, one masked and one armed, suddenly threw open the front door. The armed man walked quickly towards the aged man.

"Throw up your hands, quick," he ordered. "This is a holdup."

"I'll be ——— if I do," replied the old man, and he ran through a rear door, closing it behind him and calling loudly to his son.

The men quickly rifled a small box, containing about $1.50, which lay in plain view on the counter. Another similar box with money, and a cash drawer in the store, were not molested. Emptying the contents of the single box into their hands, the three robbers hurried through the front door and escaped in the darkness.

The old man and his son gave chase for a short distance, but the robbers quickly disappeared. The police department was notified, and every available detective was put on the case. All the patrolmen on the East Side were notified and provided with excellent descriptions of the men, but up to a late hour last night no arrests had been made.

It is believed by the detectives that the crime was committed by the same three men who entered the residence of Wenegal, the grocer, at East Eighth and Lincoln streets, Sunday night. The family was at church when the place was entered. The burglars found a small bank, containing $2 in change which had been saved by the children for Christmas, and extracted the money.

BANK LOOT IS AT OGDEN

the local department bearing on the subject. Every effort has been made, too, to preserve secrecy, although accurate details were obtained yesterday.

The two $500 bills in the package found at Ogden afford the distinctive marks for identification. One of these, it has been found, is a gold certificate and the other legal tender. Two just such bills were stolen from the East Side Bank. Nineteen $100 bills were likewise taken and the fact that there are 14 bills of such denomination in the Ogden package further established the source of the money.

Bank Seeks Return of Money.

Negotiations were taken up yesterday forenoon for the return of the money to Portland. H. H. Newhall, president of the East Side Bank, says he can identify the two big bills and it is for that purpose that the currency will be forwarded. In order to accomplish this the police authorities found it necessary yesterday to wait upon Postmaster Minto and the local postal inspectors. Inasmuch as the loot has developed in the mails, the Government agents now enter actively upon the case.

Records of the Portland postoffice have been gone through carefully to find anything which might suggest that the money was sent out from Portland before going to Salt Lake and thence to Ogden. One notation has been found of a suspicious second-class package sent out the night after the holdup.

Based on the Ogden developments, the authorities now have two theories; one that the three men shipped the bulk of their money to Utah and went there by indirect routes to split the small fortune they had stolen, the other that they divided the spoils in the city and separated.

This idea has been kept in mind in the examination into the postal records. It was argued that one man might have started East by way of Ogden, while another went north and another south. Just what the records have revealed to support this idea is not disclosed, but it is regarded by many of the officers as being the most probable method of escape.

Robber Believed to Be Here.

"I have no doubt but that at least two of the men got away by train, but I am positive that one of them is right here in the city this minute," said a well-known official yesterday. "He is checking up on what is being done by the authorities and any information he gets will be promptly sent out to the others."

The shipping of a bundle of money from Salt Lake is easily explained, the authorities say, and the explanation throws further light on the craftiness of the men that must be dealt with in this difficult pursuit. Going out on one of the trains a day or two after the robbery and taking his part of the plunder along, the man who calls himself Charles Price sojourned at Salt Lake until the heat of chase was gone and then started either Coastward or on East. He shipped the currency to Ogden, well knowing that a second-class package sent from Salt Lake to Ogden would never be investigated in connection with a remote bank robbery.

The officers are divided as to whether he was coming back to the Coast or proceeding East by way of the Union Pacific. Several take the stand that the fellow would feel himself entirely free from suspicion, traveling in the direction of the crime and must have intended coming right on through when he left Salt Lake, traveling north and west to Ogden. Others insist that the fellow was headed on East by easy stages and to substantiate their theory point to the fact of the $500 bills, which could readily be disposed of in the East and yet would excite immediate suspicion if presented by an unknown person west of the Rockies.

Hope is no longer entertained that the claimant of the package of Ogden is going to put in a second appearance. Provided he received an equal third of the loot, he must have close to $3000 in gold and silver with him and thus is amply provided with funds for traveling about from city to city, dodging the police and secret service men.

"That fellow's only mistake was in taking the name of Charles Price," said a well-known secret service man yesterday. "He should have realized, provided of course that he is one of the fugitives, that the name is a very common one and that in sending a package ahead addressed to himself or an accomplice, there was every danger of some one of the same name receiving it at the postoffice.

"But some kind of a slip was only to be expected. If that kind of people didn't make mistakes there wouldn't be any business for us fellows. I knew they would make a hitch and here it is. They will make another, and we'll get them. Those fellows will never get away."

Says Robbers Stayed in Portland.

"Because the correspondent who sent out the story of the finding of the $2400 in a second-class mail package in the Ogden postoffice Saturday night went off at half cock, and did not wait long enough to connect that money with the East Side bank robbery, the chances of the arrest of any of the three men concerned in the looting being arrested have lessened considerably," said another secret service man, who has been working on the case, last night. "Up to the time that the story of the money in the second-class mail package was published, the three men most intimately concerned in the robbery were in this city. And so was the greater part of the money. But when the story first appeared on Sunday morning, the three men at once left town; and took what part of the money they possessed with them. I know that this was so, for as late as Saturday I was in communication with one of the crowd. Sunday I could find none of the men, and I have since been unable to locate them. The story in the paper showed me why.

"Maybe this sounds like hot air to you, but I will show you why it is so. I was not working on the bank case in my official capacity. As soon as I read of the robbery I was morally certain of the identity of the men who had pulled off the deal, because of other information I had about them and their reasons for being in Portland. Later I was asked by the bank officials to handle the case, if I could; and I was urged particularly to get the return of the money, even if I had to let the men get away to do so. I got into communication with the men I was sure had pulled off the deal, and told them I had them dead to rights; and that if they would blow through with the money they could get out of town.

Two Were Ready to Compromise.

"They denied all knowledge of the crime, naturally; but I told them things I knew about the case, together with other things I was able to reason out, from my knowledge of these men and their movements before the robbery. They were finally convinced that I 'had the goods' on them, and said they would talk matters over and let me know later. In the meantime I kept as close a watch on them as I could, though I was engaged on other work. We had several subsequent meetings, or rather I met their agent; and I always emphasized the fact that the only choice they had was either to return the money or spend a long term in jail. Two of the men, I understood, were willing to come through on a compromise basis; but the third held out.

"This third man was holding off because he had already sent that second-class mail package with the $2400 in it to Ogden, and he knew he could not come back with his share. While negotiations were in this condition the accidental discovery of the money occurred, and that blew the whole thing up. The men left town at once, all of them, and now anybody who wants to take up the chase has got a more difficult task than before."

The secret service man making this statement is well known in local police circles, but asked that for personal and business reasons his name be withheld from publication. He declares that the package containing the money was sent from Portland the day after the robbery, and that the fact that its contents were wrapped in a Salt Lake newspaper was merely an accident, or a blind in case the contents should have been discovered. The fact that so valuable a package was sent in such an open way, he declared, showed the craft and cunning of the robber.

The same secret service man also said that while the robbers were in this city they lived at the best hotels here, two of them stopping for a time at the Portland. It was there that he had his first interview with the men he suspected.

Thinks Highwaymen Went North.

The report that these men went south after the robbery, and that one of them stopped in Roseburg and left a trail of hundred-dollar bills, is laughed at by the same detective. He says he believes the men all went northward on Sunday, crossed the Canadian line, and are now going East through the Dominion. He gives it as his opinion that one or more of the party will drop down from Canada at Winnipeg, and that all will eventually meet again either in Chicago or New York. He says the only three men who he has reason to believe were implicated in the robbery have worked together for some time, and that he believes they will stick together in the future, and that unless they are picked up by accident they will not be caught.

The only chance he believes that the police and Pinkertons have now is that the man who has thus lost the $2400 may be unable to make the other two share his loss, and may "blow" on his companions as a result, if immunity is promised him. He does not believe this likely, though, as the men have worked together for years.

Boy Who Protects Himself.

Philadelphia Record.

A business man whose office is near Tenth and Arch streets hired a new errand boy last week. He was tired of having gentle, meek boys who were always coming back to the office with bleeding noses and tales of how they had been attacked by other "fellows," so this time he picked out the huskiest and most pugnacious boy he could find. The first time the new boy went out with a letter to deliver he was pounced upon by one of the numerous side street gangs of the neighborhood. He held his own and put the crowd to flight, but the letter he carried was torn and mutilated. "All right," said the boss when the boy returned to the office with the remaining scraps of the letter. "We'll fix that." So he called a clerk and told him to have some harnessmaker make a waterproof, oilcloth bag and sew it tightly to a belt which could be fastened about the boy's waist. Now the boy must put all letters and papers for delivery in this bag before he leaves the office. Neither rain nor mud nor all the scrapping he may do can harm them. For some days the new boy was slightly delayed on every trip by numerous chances to fight. But he is a hustler. It was not long until he established a reputation throughout that section, and now he is seldom molested. His employer is delighted and intends to raise his wages next week. "I tell you that kid is a satisfaction," he declared. "No more boys who can't fight can find jobs here."

FIGHT IN INDIANA

Election of Democratic Legislature Means Struggle.

CENTERS ABOUT BEVERIDGE

Senator's Seat Vacant Two Years Hence When Hemenway, Fairbanks and Watson Will Be After His Job.

OREGONIAN NEWS BUREAU, Washington, Dec. 14.—The fact that the Indiana Legislature went Democratic this year insures a lively fight two years hence for the seat held by Senator Beveridge. Senator Hemenway will retire on March 4, next, and it is understood he will be a candidate for Beveridge's seat, provided the Republicans have regained control of the Legislature by that time.

But Hemenway is not the only Indiana Republican who will be out of a job after the 4th of March. Vice-President Fairbanks is one, Representative Watson, the defeated candidate for Governor, is another, and Congressman Charles B. Landis is a third, not to mention Representative Overstreet, who also went down to defeat this year.

All Seek Senatorship.

All these men regard themselves as of Senatorial size, and most of them will be candidates against Senator Beveridge, unless Mr. Taft in filling offices at the opening of his Administration, makes provision for these "lame ducks."

Vice-President Fairbanks has announced that he will take up the practice of law as soon as he leaves the Vice-President's chair. None of the other defeated candidates have announced their plans for the future, but it is possible that Mr. Taft will place some of them in Government offices for two or four years, long enough in any event to keep them on the payroll until they have another opportunity of running for Congress.

New Public Printer.

The Government printing office has always been a source of annoyance to the Administration, and it was largely through the investigation conducted by Representative Landis that the President was able to discover the true condition which existed there and remove Public Printer Stillings, who was responsible for most of the trouble. But even now the President has not got the office in satisfactory shape, and it is thought possible that Representative Landis may be appointed Public Printer soon after March 4. He is a practical printer by trade and a big enough man to run the office properly.

Representative Overstreet is chairman of the committee on postoffices, and is familiar with the postal service, and he may be made First Assistant Postmaster-General. There is no particular position for which Senator Hemenway or Representative Watson are particularly adapted, but if they are taken care of they may be placed in the diplomatic service or given some assistant secretaryship in the departments.

Mr. Davis' Pen in Vinegar.

Richard Harding Davis, in Colliers.

Today, dramatic critics might be divided into two classes: the misanthrope, who set his standard so high that in the modern theater he can see nothing to enjoy and nothing to praise; and, the newspaper comedian, who regards the men and women on the stage only as persons in a pillory. Owing to some strange inertia on the part of the public he has acquired the right to hurl at actors and actresses impertinent personalities, witticisms, sometimes cruel jests that fester and leave a scar. To some men, the mere fact that a fellow human being is in the stocks, unable to retaliate, already a figure for laughter, is reason enough for passing him in silence, with averted eyes. But the low-comedy critic is not paid to be magnanimous. If, by a flash of his wit, he can make his readers laugh, even though it send a leading lady into hysterics or sets an actor swearing, he is satisfied. To him, to see his name on an ashcan, under some such stirring quotation from his deathless prose as "A chuckle every minute," "It will make Comstock sit up," is Fame. It is his business, by ridicule, to send chorus girls sobbing to bed.
