TAX ON BEQUESTS IS PLAN

SCHURMAN'S IDEA TO CHECK GROWTH OF FORTUNES.

President of Cornell Discusses Remedies for Inequality of Wealth and Resultant Evils.

OMAHA, Dec. 16.—At the National Corn Exposition here today, Dr. Jacob Schurman, of Cornell University, gave an address on "The Problem of Great Fortunes." The immense concert hall of the exposition building was crowded to overflowing.

After stating that the increasing inequality of economic conditions was fostering socialism to a greater degree than is shown in the Socialist party vote, he rejected that theory as a remedy. Nevertheless the growing inequality would reach a point where there was no alternative but revolution. He declared that the first requisite was enlightenment of public opinion, for more could be done by the wise action of individuals than by all the efforts of government.

Make Employees Partners.

Saying that wage-earners must be given a stake in the community, he cited as an example the selling of its stock by the United States Steel Corporation to its employees, of whom nearly 300,000 are now shareholders and their dividends are guaranteed. Of this system he said: "It seems capable of application to all the large and strong corporations of the country. And if they adopt it, hundreds of thousands of workmen would be benefited, and some other device might be found for the encouragement of their establishments."

Use Wealth in Public Interest.

The farmers, he said, were solving the problem by moving to the new land of the Canadian Northwest. Colossal fortunes were on trial and whether and how far it was worth while to encourage and protect them was a question for the future. The voters who would answer that question would be influenced by the manner in which the owners of these fortunes used them in life and disposed of them at death. The true test was the way in which a man spent his wealth. He cited the public benefactions of many rich men as evidence that they regarded their fortunes as a trust to be administered for the benefit of humanity. He continued:

I believe that the conduct of a few multi-millionaires now living is likely to determine the attitude and shape the policy of the public towards the phenomena of colossal fortunes for many years to come. If they use them in the interest of the public, the public will not begrudge them their success. If they use them for the aggrandizement of family or the consolidation of private interests, we are likely to see attacks on the existing laws of bequest. Nor will these attacks be met by the statement—true though it is—that these fortunes are engaged in productive enterprises, and are, therefore, beneficial to the public.

May Impose Inheritance Tax.

Dr. Schurman went on to point out that, if multi-millionaires themselves failed to recognize their obligation to share their fortunes with the community, which they have accumulated with the co-operation of the community, then it is in the obligation of the Government to enforce this obligation by a system of taxation on the transfer and inheritance of decedent's estates. He expressed the opinion that there was no "juster tax, no tax whose incidence is more lightly felt." He suggested that in connection with this National Corn Exposition, the Governor of Nebraska call a conference of Governors or other representatives.

He went on to advocate wise legislation on the subject. He declared that a large corporation was merely a mode of organizing modern business, had supplanted competition and should not be prohibited but controlled in the public interest. He commended the Public Utility Commission of New York as a means to this end and as an advantage both to the public and the corporations.
