

YOUNG'S CHANCES NOT ONE IN 100

Nomination as Postmaster Is Likely to Die in Committee at End of Session.

POOR PROSPECT WITH TAFT

Even if Bourne Gets Name Before Senate, Young's Populist Record Would Kill Him—Incurred Hitchcock's Enmity.

OREGONIAN NEWS BUREAU, Washington, Jan. 29.—With Senator Fulton blocking the way there is not one chance in a hundred that John H. Young can be confirmed as postmaster of Portland prior to March 4.

Mr. Fulton is confident that his objection is sufficient to prevent Mr. Young's confirmation; Senator Bourne is inclined to a contrary view, but the junior Senator is not fully versed in the various ramifications of that mysterious thing known as "senatorial courtesy."

Whatever may happen to Mr. Young between now and March 4 the outcome will be a demand for a fight on a legislative standing in the Senate of the Oregon Senators.

The issue is clearly joined between them, and there must be a test of strength, unless one or the other surrenders—and from the present look of things there is no compromise in the air.

Keep Affair in Committee.

The nomination of Mr. Young is pending before the committee on postoffices, held there by the request of Mr. Fulton. Mr. Bourne is a member of that committee, but he fills the place given him by Mr. Fulton a year ago.

He has not served as long on that committee as did Mr. Fulton before he voluntarily retired, and therefore he is not as well acquainted with its members as is his senior colleague.

In all probability, Mr. Fulton will allow the nomination to remain in the postoffice committee unacted upon, rather than have it reported and force a fight in the Senate. This is good tactics, and far the surer plan.

It is at this juncture that Mr. Bourne is likely to run against "senatorial courtesy." He will probably find that Chairman Penrose, who is not much of an admirer of President Roosevelt nor much of a believer in the principles of a primary law which will compel a Republican Legislature to elect a Democrat to the United States Senate, will have a multitude of Senators eager to support the nomination of Mr. Young.

What Mr. Penrose's objections will be no one can tell, but they will be sufficient to justify the chairman in refusing to act in accordance with the wishes of the junior Senator from Oregon, when those wishes fail to coincide with the desires of the senior Senator from that State.

Senate Would Be Hostile. If Mr. Young's nomination should be reported, even though the report of the committee be adverse, Mr. Bourne could call it up in executive session and demand a vote. Should such a contingency arise, however, the junior Senator would be called upon to defend his man and it is well known that he is not a public speaker nor inclined to oratory.

Only a short time ago Senator Dewey told it is known that the Senate up to March 4 intended to scrutinize carefully all important nominations made by the President and to reject those found objectionable.

Fire Damp Costs 2 Lives

EXPLOSION IN ASHFORD MINE NEAR TACOMA. Jack Norell Buried 4000 Feet Deep. W. Dinkler Dies Trying to Recover Friend.

TACOMA, Jan. 28.—As the result of an explosion of fire damp in the new mine operated at Ashford by the Moore Investment Company, of Seattle, one miner is entombed under tons of rocks 4000 feet in the bowels of the mountain, another is dead from suffocation, while two are injured, one perhaps fatally. The dead are: Jack Norell, miner; body still in mine. William Dinkler, mine foreman; body recovered. Carl Wickstrom, who was extricated from a pile of debris by a rescue party, is so badly injured he may not recover.

Yellow Cur Guards Baby

MONGREL PUP SHOWS UP IN SAMARITAN ROLE. Calls Attention to Abandoned Child, Leads Kind Man to It, Then Runs Away.

BROOKLYN, Jan. 29.—(Special.)—So far as Samuel Segal knew, there had never been a dog attached to any of the families who live at 25 Sheffield avenue. And nothing could have been more disturbing to a weary Brooklyn man than to have his right to enter his flat and go to bed challenged by a dog with an aggressively nervous growl. Mr. Segal stopped short in his tracks and lighted a match. From the back of the front hall the growl rolled out again. In the flickering light he could see the animal's excited eyes glaring at him. Segal moved toward the stairs. The dog made no objection. Segal reached dressed him again. This time it was not a growl, but an appealing whine, and a sharp yelp, as if of distress. Segal lighted another match and leaned over the stair-rail. He could see the dog more plainly this time. It was a yellow cur with lop ears and a most raggedly unattractive tail, neither smooth nor long-haired. The dog was trotting back and forth in a little circle in the snow which had drifted through the open door into the hall. There was a little circular track marked out by its circuit. In the center was a bundle almost covered with snow. The dog had been running around and around the bundle apparently, but now, looking up at Segal, whining, with eyes upturned, he was making only the half circuit. Segal went up to his flat and got a candle and, protecting it from the draught, cautiously approached the back door of the front hall. The yellow cur growled again as he approached and so menacingly that Segal retreated. But before he could reach the stairs, the dog was bounding at him with wagging tail and short barks, running back to the bundle. Segal took courage of curiosity and returned. The dog trotted back and sat over the bundle. Segal leaped down and touched the cloth on which the snow was drifting. The dog growled. Segal drew back his hand. The dog whined. Segal looked at the dog cocked his head on one side and looked long and searchingly into Segal's eyes and then tipped his head to the other side and took another look; apparently he liked what he saw. He wagged his tail. Segal picked up the bundle. It was a baby, only a few days old. He rested it on his arm and ran his hand under the wraps. The legs and the lower part of the body were quite cold. And no wonder. For the tiny boy's only wraps were a swathing of surgeon's gauze in three or four thicknesses, a pair of pink wool booties, a pink and white checked diaper dress made for a much larger child apparently, and a Tam o' Shanter knit hat of blue and white silk and worsted. Segal bent his head and laid his ear over the little baby's heart. It was still beating, but very faintly. The man ripped open his coat and waistcoat and put the baby as close to his own warm, comfortable body as he could and ran up the stairs to his flat. The yellow cur followed at his heels, but was shut out in the hall to scratch at the door and whine. A policeman was sent for. After the Segals had wrapped the baby in an extra blanket it was taken over to the Liberty-avenue police station and put in care of Matron Minnie V. Lynch, who later took it to the Brooklyn Foundlings' Nursery, at No. 52 Atlantic avenue. Today Mrs. Ulrich, who mothers the foundlings, was able to announce that the baby had come out of its chill stupor and was showing great evidences of appetite. The yellow dog was chased out of the station when the baby was put in Matron Lynch's care. But when she came out to go downtown with the baby in her arms the dog followed along after the patrol wagon, falling behind more and more until she lost sight of him.
