Gadski in Concert at Heilig Theater

BY JOSEPH M. QUENTIN.
T is easy to see why the title "Conqueror" follows in Madame Johanna Gadski's train. It is not only because she is a great prima donna, but because she is the greatest of them all today and, being the youngest, has the freshest, most youthful tone. Ah! We are only young once! The days past 40 years may find us fat and lending money on mortgages instead of borrowing, but if we sing—the near-rasping tone of age and wear creeps in. And nobody can shut age out.

Gadski was the star attraction last night at the Hellig, where a brilliant audience gathered to bear her homage, the concert being under the direction of the concert being under the direction of the concert being under the concert being under the direction of the concert being under the concert bein Lois Steers-Wynn Coman. It was an-other "encore" night, and both Gadski and her planist, Frank La Forge, got round after round of applause. Gadski has learned to sing easily and naturally round after round of applause. Gadski has learned to sing easily and naturally in English since I last heard her in this city. Her programme was in three parts, and it was noticeable that in the first part she used English and sang with correct accent and emphasis, highly creditable to one whose native tongue is German. Gadskit is too well-known as opera and concert star to require extended analysis as far as her programme is concerned, a programme in which tenderness, dainty humor and love predominated. Five of her selected songs were repeated, and her encores were: "Kinderlied," by Taubert, "Erl King." Schubert, "Like a Rosebud," by Frank La Forge, "The Year's at the Spring." Beach, and "Frunnhilde's Cry." from "The Valkyrie." Every concert was its supreme moment, and the one last night came when Gadski, with rare fire and dramatic passion, sang and the one last night came when Gadski, with rare fire and dramatic passion, sang the immolation scene from Wagner's "Gotterdammerung." This fire scene belongs to "Der Ring der Nibelungen" triotogy, which latter is in four parts. "Das Rheingold" ("The Rhinegold"): "Das Walkure" ("The Valkyrie"): "Stegfried" and "Gotterdammerung" ("The Twillight of the Gods"). Gadski impersonated Brunnhilde, the Valkyrie, Wotan's daugnter, who is in love with Siegfried, the hero, who rescued her through a magic wall of fire. Faithless Siegfried is dead, and Brunnhilde, mounted on a horse, rides through smoke and flame, reaching his funeral-pyre, where she, too meets death.

through smoke and flame, reaching his funeral-pyre, where she, too, meets death. Gadski interpreted both the thraidom of love and the agony of despair.

Mr. La Forge, whose native town is Rockford, Ill., is a Lesschetizky pupil, and is so great a planist that he nearly divided honors with the great Gadski. He is one of the most artistic accompanists in the musical profession, and most of his work was done last night without looking at any music.

DRAMATIC SEQUEL TO TROU-BLES OF DAVENPORTS.

Woman Attempts Again to Leave Husband, He Interferes at Depot, Stormy Scene Follows.

"Wedded but Parted," is an appropriate title for the sequel to the marital infelicities of C. H. Davenport, one of the members of the firm of Davenport Bros., ommission merchants, on Front street and his wife, which was enacted last night at the Union Depot and at the police station, and made a fitting climax to the sensational disappearance of Mrs. Davenport a few days ago. She was thought to have committed suicide, but was found contentedly earning her living away from her husband in the capacity of a domestic.

Last night's incidents revolved about the endeavor of the parents of Mrs. Davenport to take her away from her husband and back to her old home on the farm, the sudden appearance of the husband at the train to prevent the de-parture of his spouse, the championing by the sturdy farmer of his daughter and his driving the infuriated husband from his daughter's side at the point of a revolver. Patrolman Hirsch appeared at revolver. Patrolman Hirsch appeared at the psychological moment, before any rash act had been committed, and took the whole party to the police station, where after an hour of vituperation on both sides, when everybody was talking at once, Captain Moore and Chief of Police Gritzmacher disposed of the case by arresting W. T. Burge, father of Mrs. Davenport, for carrying concealed weapons, and both Mr. Burge and Mr. Davenport for disorderly conduct.

All the elements of a real melodrams marked the meeting of the wife with the marked the meeting of the wire with the injured air, the indignant mother-in-law and father-in-law, about-to-be-abandoned husband and the infant child by Mrs. Davenport's first husband. Mr. Davenport is the woman's third. The opening scene occurred in the Davenport rooms. 248 Sherman street. Following her return to her husband's home after the ballow saverble for her. Mrs. Devenport's police search for her, Mrs. Davenport's parents came down from their little farm three miles outside The Dalles, Or. Mrs. Davenport asked her husband yesterday afternoon if she might go back and visit at home for a few days. Mr. Davenport acquiesced and went down to his store to get the money for her expenses. When he came back he found almost all of his belongings had been packed up and hauled away.

He went to the depot and found the family in the baggage-room checking their trunks for the 7 P. M. train. He endeavored to speak to his wife and she turned her head away from him. He stepped toward her and Mrs. Burge planted her sturdy little figure between Mr. Davenover and her dawayler and hauled away. in Gregory Heights. Pay for one on monthly rent if you like. Mr. Davenport and her daughter and told him that he should never speak to her again. Then there were things doing. Mr. Davenport said he would. All the Burge family, including Mrs.

Davenport, said that he would not. He demanded things in the trunks which he said they had stolen from his rooms and they refused to open them. He threatened their arrest. Mr. Burge then threw his hand back to his hip pocket and drew his revolver, warning Mr. Davenport to go away. Then Patroiman Hirsch appeared and disarmed Mr. Burge.

At the police station there was nothing but a jangle of words for a long time, after which Mr. Davenport made the most atrocious charges against his wife in public and during which she and her parents listened in partial slience and glared at him with looks which spoke volumes. When they all found that they were facing incarceration in the city's bastile, they became more calm. Mr. Davenport charged that his mother-in-law was trying to coerce his wife to leave him, and when he found that the police could make no arrest on these grounds she asserted that they had stolen things from his rooms which were in the trunks they had checked at the depot, and he wanted the trunks held. The police said that they were powerless to act, and referred him to the District Attorney for a search warrant.

He then said he would be satisfied if he could only talk with his wife a little for a search warrant.

He then said he would be satisfied if he could only talk with his wife a little and kiss the baby. Here again Mrs. Burge came most actively into the foreground, and planting herself again between her daughter, the child and Mr. Davenpert defed him to touch or speak Davenport, defied him to touch or speak to them. Mr. Davenport wrung his hands and talked excitedly, but finally names and talked excitedly, but shally agreed to part from his wife without raising any further scene. As the Burge family left the station Mr. Davenport held out his arms appealingly to his wife, but she told him she did not want to see him again.

Captain Moore kept Mr. Davenport at the station until after the departing Captain Moore kept air. Davenport at the station until after the departing family had get out of sight, and then let the complaining husband go, too. Both Davenport and his father-in-law were made to promise that they would appear in the Municipal Court today appear in the Municipal Court today and answer to the charges which Chief of Police Gritzmacher had directed to be placed against them. Mrs. Daven-port and her redoubtable mother went to a rooming-hosue on North Sixth atreet, near the depot, where they will remain until the case against Mr.

Burge is settled.

Davenport said he would have a war rant sworn out against Eurge, both for attempting to kill him and for larocny. Mrs. Davenport said that she did not care what her husband did, she would not go back to him.
