

SCOTT REVOLTS AGAINST BOSSES

Tells Senate Leaders South Central States Ignored on Committees.

KEEN WATCH ON EXPENSES

Big New Committee Composed of Chairmen of Others Named—Natural Resources Have Committee—New Men on Canal.

WASHINGTON, March 22.—Much dissatisfaction was evinced in the Republican Senatorial caucus today over the committee assignments. Scott particularly objected to the manner in which the vacancies on the finance committee had been filled. In a speech he called attention to the fact that New England was abundantly represented and that the West had been well taken care of, but declared that the South Central states, which had Republican representation, such as West Virginia, Kentucky and Missouri, had been ignored.

Two Big New Committees.

The Senate filled today all vacancies on its standing committees and created two powerful committees, confirming the action taken by the Republican and Democratic caucuses held earlier in the day. One of the new committees is entitled "On Public Expenditures," and is composed of the following: Hale, Akridge, Warren, Perkins, Penrose, Dooliver and Chapp, who are ex-officio members as chairmen of the committees on appropriation, finance, military affairs, naval affairs, postoffice and post roads, agriculture and forestry and Indian affairs, the chairman of the appropriations committee, Hale, being the acting chairman of the new committee, and the following other members: Nelson, Gamble, Crane, Carter, Bourne, Cummins, Burton, Root, McClarin, Newlands, Owen, Fletcher and Hughes.

New Men on Chief Committees.

The new members of the committee on finance are Cullom, Lovins, McCumber, Smoot and Flint, the Republican representation having been increased by one, and Simmons, Democrat. From the committee on appropriations, Cullom retired and Burkett, Kean and Curtis were appointed as new members, while Culberson took the Democratic vacancy.

Many Changes of Chairmen.

There was quite a number of changes in chairmanships of committees, as follows: Dooliver, agriculture and forestry; Hale, appropriations; Smith of Michigan, Canadian relations; La Follette, census; Cummins, civil service and retrenchment; Burham, claims; Talliferro, corporations organized in the District of Columbia; Sutherland, Cuban relations; Borah, education and labor; Gamble, enrolled bills; Richardson, Smith of Oregon, branches of the Civil Service; Stephenson, expenditures in the Department of Agriculture; Chadwell, expenditures in the Interior Department; Bryan, expenditures in the Department of Justice; Brilow, expenditures in the Postoffice Department; Root, expenditures in the Department of State; Burton, expenditures in the Treasury Department; Briggs, geological surveys; Jones, industrial extensions and measures; Oliver, transportation routes to the seaboard; and Guggenheim, university of the United States.

New Canal Committee.

McCumber, Brandegee, Dooliver, Dick, Borah, Richardson, Crawford and Blount, Republicans, and Talliferro, Simmons, Johnston of Alabama, Smith of Maryland and Hughes, Democrats. Carter becomes chairman of irrigation and reclamation of arid lands; Perkins, naval affairs; Dewey, Pacific islands and Porto Rico; Brown, patents; Smoot, printing; Crane, rules; Page, standards, weights and measures; Oliver, transportation routes to the seaboard; and Guggenheim, university of the United States.

CONGRESS TO WATCH MONEY

National Lawmakers Will Keep Track of All Expenditures.

WASHINGTON, March 22.—There will be a new order in the making of appropriations in the present Congress, if the purposes of several Senators are realized when Congress assembles in the first regular session next December. These Senators are looking forward to some plan by which Congress may be fully informed concerning the expenditures of Government money which it is declared is now known only in a general way. It is understood by many members of the Senate that the method of auditing accounts, but which stand for items of expense that would not so readily meet popular approval if plainly named. There will be an effort to reduce the appropriations for vague purposes and to confine them, as far as possible, to specific purposes, and then to overhaul the accounting systems of the departments so that Congress will have greater access to the exact purposes for which the money has been expended.

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE CUBAN REPUBLIC.

Alfredo Zayas.

NEW YORK, March 22.—(Special.)—Alfredo Zayas, Vice-President of the Cuban republic, is the leader of one of the political parties on the island. The new administration began with a quarrel between Zayas and President Gomez, which, it was reported, would result in the resignation of Zayas. The cause of his anger with the President was the appointment of Ricardo Arnao to be head of the secret police. Zayas did not resign, but he and the President are not on the best terms, and it would not surprise any one if there was an open breach between them.

Sanitarium for Tuberculosis.

WASHINGTON, March 22.—An appropriation of $250,000 for the establishment of a national tuberculosis sanitarium in the State of Colorado is provided for in a bill introduced by Representative Sabath today.

PRICE UP, IF TARIFF IS CUT

ABERDEEN SAWMILL MAN HAS NEW ARGUMENT.

Higher Prices Must Be Asked for Better Grades of Lumber to Make Profit.

ABERDEEN, Wash., March 22.—(Special.)—"In my judgment the old duty on lumber will be cut, and it is just," said W. B. Mack, manager of the Slado Mill Company's interests, this morning.

"The effect of placing lumber on the free list, instead of cheapening it to the consumer, will have a tendency to raise the price, that is, on the bulk of lumber shipped from the Coast. The price of stumpage will not be reduced, and the bulk of it is in strong hands, and while common grades will doubtless be reduced in price, causing the consumer to rougher logs as well as the smaller ones to be left in the woods, the cost of logging will be increased.

INSURGENTS LOSE BY BAD BLINDERS

Had Majority in Favor of Revision of Rules, but Threw Away Their Chance.

CLARK SOUGHT TO DICTATE

Divided His Forces by Insult to Fitzgerald and Misrepresenting Deal With Insurgents—Had No Plan Ready.

OREGONIAN NEWS BUREAU, Washington, March 22.—The Republican insurgents in the House of Representatives and their allies, the Democrats, lost their fight for the revision of the House rules for two reasons: They lacked intelligent leadership, and they had no practical plan of revision to propose. Had they been led by some master hand and had they offered to the House some tangible, sensible modification of the old rules, they would have carried the day for it was demonstrated that they had the votes to defeat the Cannon forces. But when they muddled affairs, and stirred up strife in their own camp, and when Fitzgerald of New York, a Democratic believer in revision, came forward with a definite plan for revising the rules, the Democrats divided and enough of them joined the Cannon forces to utterly rout the insurgent band and the bulk of their Democratic cohorts, and the old leaders sustained a substantial victory.

Showed Their Incompetence.

The very fact that the revisionists had won their fight then threw away their victory was strong evidence that the men leading the clamor against Cannon were incompetent to undertake to revise the rules. And the situation which they themselves brought about was ample justification for Republicans who stood by Cannon and his leaders. The insurgents were for riot and disorder and had they carried the day, the House of Representatives would have become a mob; disorder and riot would have been rampant, and business, instead of being facilitated, would have been hindered. The anti-Cannon men were not equal to the job they had undertaken. When the real attitude of the allied forces was shown up in the debate on rules, it was found that the Republican insurgents were clamoring to take from the speaker the right to appoint the House committees, but were willing to have committees made up by a special committee of 15, chosen by Champ Clark, the minority leader. Clark, of course, had chosen a "packed" committee which he could dominate, and it became known that the insurgents were really trying to transfer to the minority the right to make committee assignments in the House—the most unheard-of thing in parliamentary procedure.

Clark Divided Own Forces.

The scheme would have been had enough under any circumstances, but the fight showed up Clark, the minority leader, in a very poor light. He came out of that fight with less credit than any other man who participated. He demonstrated his own utter lack of fitness for party leadership, for he himself, in the midst of the struggle, created a breach in the Democratic lineup, which resulted in giving the Cannon forces more than enough support to defeat the insurgent movement. Clark not only snubbed, but insulted the brightest man on the Democratic side of the House, and that insult is resented by all of Fitzgerald's friends. Had Clark behaved in a reasonably shrewd leader, he would not have divided his forces in the midst of a contest.

But Clark made other tactical mistakes. He declared that the Republican insurgents had entered into a hide-bound agreement to ally with the Democrats first, last and all the time. When cross-questioned on this point, he reiterated his statement. That admission placed the Republican insurgents on a plane with the Democrats in effect, made them Democrats in spirit, and gave them a standing and "Gussie" Gardner, one of their leaders, was forced to deny Clark's statement and to assert that the agreement did not reach beyond the fight on the rules. When Gardner made this thing, he drove other Democrats to the support of Fitzgerald.
