Tariff Bill Is Declared to Break Pledge With Revision Upward.

WOOL DUTIES DENOUNCED

Nelson Says Cotton, Glass and Woolen Rates Too High-Aldrich and Bailey Argue About War Democrats.

WASHINGTON, April 22.-Republican criticism of the pending tariff bill on the ground that the rates were too high Two Other Physicians Agree in Opinwas prominent in the senate today when Nelson of Minnesota and Dolliver of Iowa attacked various schedules. Under the guise of discussing the duty on gas retorts a general debate was participated in by Democratic Senators.

It was agreed by Mr. Aldrich that at any time while the measure was being considered for amendment any paragraph might be reverted and he subject to amendment without the necessity of resorting to any formal parliamentary procedure.

Explosion About Gas Retorts.

The consideration of the duty on gas The consideration of the duty on gas retorts caused an oratorical explosion. The committee on finance had increased the rate from $3, as provided in the House bill, to 30 per cent ad valorem, the new duty on large retorts being three times the amount levied by the House bill and the present law. This course was denounced by Bailey as evidence of failure of the Republican party to keep faith with the people in their demand for a revision of the tariff downward.

Nelson called attention to records showing that even under the $3 specific duty in 1907 only 55 gas retorts were imported, valued at $1600, yielding an income of only about $160 a year. That, he said, showed the old duty was prohibitive, and he thought conditions did not warrant an increase. Balley read from President Taft's inauguration address to show that he had favored lower duties, and Aldrich re-auguration address to show that he had favored lower duties, and Aldrich responded that the pending bill proposed to fulfill that pledge absolutely.

"I went into the Union Army before I was 21 and have been a Republican ever since," declared Aldrich in a colloquy with Bailey. Aldrich asserted that practically none of the Union soldiers north of Mason and Dixon's line had been Democrats after the war.

Balley replied that great injustice had been done to hundreds of thousands of Democrats who had come to the aid of the North in the struggle of '61-'65, "but for whose attitude the result might have Addrich declared he had not intended to say there were no loyal Democrats in the North or in the Union Army.

No Chance to Disrupt South.

Bailey asserted that any such attack on any Democrat was III timed.
"I have heard it said," said Balley,
"that the present administration alms as one of its chief accomplishments to dis-rupt the solid South, and it is endeavoring to accomplish that result by flatterthem an invitation to the white House or by giving them a por-tion of the patronage of the country.

"The President wastes his time and wastes his breath when he gives heed to these men who tell him they can disrupt the South. There is in the South today, as there was before the war, a sentiment that is not Democratic. In the older times they were Whigs and in this day they are Republicans. But some of them are ashamed of their associates down are ashamed of their associates down

This bill is full of sectional discriminations. The farmer's binding twine is placed on the free list, but in this very same bill the bagging of the cotton planters is highly protected. If you want to find a way to the hearts of our people of the South, do not treat their unjustly."

Nelson Prods Woolen Trust.

Nelson denounced the measure, declarschedules were too high. He said that placing duties on woolen manufactured goods 50 per cent higher than the duty goods 59 per cent higher than the duty on raw wool was unjust.

Gallinger interrupted, referring to the closing of the woolen mills of New Hampshire by the low rates of the Wilson bill.

Nelson energetically declared that that was the same spirit that actuated New England with its criticism of any effort to reduce the high rates that had prevailed upon her products.

"Never."

"Was her figure well developed?"

"As far as I could see."

Concerning a meeting with Mrs. Gould in Hartford. Conn., Mr. Farnum said:

"She was talking about returning to the stage and wanted me to find a suitable play for her out of all the manuscript sent to me."

prevailed upon her products.

Dolliver declared that not only were the duties of the Payne-Aldrich bill too high, but they were so worded as to result in large increases of rates without with the duties of the Payne increases in light. definite indication of such increases in "The woolen schedule," he said, "ought to be reduced. For two years this schedule has been a bad advertisement for the Republican party. I intend so to vote as to adhere, as far as possible to every reduction in the Dingley rate that was made by the House committee and to every reduction made by the Senate committee. Wherever I find a rate in this The woolen schedule," he said, "ought

People Tired of High Tariff.

Dolliver said he had defended the Dingley law in every state of the Union, but he added:

"My audiences are growing tired. The people are tired of having these duties raised from 100 to 150 per cent on the clothes they wear upon their backs."

Addrich assumed the responsibility for the duty on hides as placed by the Dingley law, and asserted that he believed the same rate, 15 per cent, would be offered by the finance committee as a substitute for the free hides proposition of th House tariff bill.

NEW YORK, April 22.-Six hundred ditors and publishers from all parts of the country attended the joint banquet of the Associated Press and the American Newspaper Publishers' Association at the Newspaper Publishers' Association at the Waldorf-Astoria tonight. Count Johann Heinrich von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, and Joseph H. Choate were giests of honor, and delivered speeches appreciative of the work of the press. Other speakers were Major John C. Hemphill, of the Charleston News and Courier; Rev. Robert Burdette, of Los Angeles, and ex-Senator T. M. Patterson, of Colorado.

After the dinner Frank B. Noyes, presi dent of the Associated Press, presented Major Hemphill as toastmaster. A toast was drunk to the President of the United States. Mr. Hamphill spoke of the organizations whose members joined at the festive board as "the greatest and most powerful newspaper associations in the powerful newspaper associations in the world," and continued: "Here are the publishers who make the money and the editors who spend it mingling upon apparently friendly terms, while the common people pass by on the outside utterly oblivious of our real importance in the great American scenary." great American economy bassador, said:

We have long learned to look to the newspaper press as not only the quickest, but on the whole the most accurate source of intelligence in all matters of public interest. In general, one can say that the press has relieved us of the duty of reporting facts. We now confine ourselves to giving appreciations of facts and exfressing our views, which are of more or less value according to the confidence the two respective Governments and nations place in our judgment.

This work of appreciating facts we share with the press, and we naturally like those newspapers best which happen to express our own views, particularly as we suspect the public of being more ready to believe what their newspaper tells them than what we are able to say. The power to give publicity to our views on matters of international interest, throws a great responsibility upon us, diplomats as well as journalists, because in spite of all modern facilities of intercourse nations in our fave.

hational interest, throws a great responsibility upon us, diplomats as well as journalists, because in spite of all modern facilities of intercourse nations in our days have very little intimate knowledge of one another. This want of mutual knowledge may become the cause of misunderstandings, which are often only based on misconception. Most people chiefly form their opinion on international affairs after having consulted the telegrams of the foreign correspondents of their newspapers. This is why I so highly appreciate the good work done by the Associated Press, whose representatives abroad are impartial and well-informed. When I has the morning read some rather erraits telegram concerning. Germany, I always search in the papers for a Berlin telegram of the Associated Press, as I feel sure that I will then know what to belleve. This being so, I can only say that I should like to read more Berlin telegrams of the Associated Press. There can never be too much of a good thing.

I need not have any apprehension of such telegrams, for as the President of the United States a few weeks ago wrote to the editor of a German newspaper of this city: It is gratifying to know that the relations between the United States and the German Fatherland have never been more cordial and full of mutual sympathy than today.
