WASHINGTOON D.C.- President William McKinley advised the House of Representatives on June 10 that the treaty with England had been signed and was to be submitted for the Senate's consideration and action. The President stated that the treaty was not only just and equitable, but also that it was in the best interests of the United States.

The treaty, known as the Treaty of Washington, was signed on May 9, 1871, and it marked a significant milestone in the history of U.S.-UK relations. It ended the war of 1812 and established a lasting peace between the two nations.

The treaty was negotiated by President James Madison and British Prime Minister George Canning. It was ratified by the U.S. Senate on July 5, 1871, and by the British Parliament on July 10, 1871. The treaty was formally exchanged on July 15, 1871, and it took effect on July 10, 1871.

The treaty included a number of provisions, including:

- The United States recognized the sovereignty of the United Kingdom over the whole of the British Empire.
- The United States promised not to interfere with the internal government of the United Kingdom.
- The United States agreed to respect the rights of British subjects in the United States.
- The United States promised to pay compensation to British citizens who had suffered losses as a result of hostilities during the war.
- The United States promised to indemnify the United Kingdom for losses sustained as a result of the war.
- The United States agreed to establish diplomatic relations with the United Kingdom.

The treaty was a significant achievement for both nations, and it helped to establish a lasting peace between the United States and the United Kingdom.

The treaty was signed by President William McKinley and British Prime Minister David Lloyd George. It was ratified by the U.S. Senate on July 10, 1871, and by the British Parliament on July 10, 1871. The treaty was formally exchanged on July 15, 1871, and it took effect on July 10, 1871.

The treaty included a number of provisions, including:

- The United States recognized the sovereignty of the United Kingdom over the whole of the British Empire.
- The United States promised not to interfere with the internal government of the United Kingdom.
- The United States agreed to respect the rights of British subjects in the United States.
- The United States promised to pay compensation to British citizens who had suffered losses as a result of hostilities during the war.
- The United States promised to indemnify the United Kingdom for losses sustained as a result of the war.
- The United States agreed to establish diplomatic relations with the United Kingdom.

The treaty was a significant achievement for both nations, and it helped to establish a lasting peace between the United States and the United Kingdom.