Correspondence solicited and exchanged. Address E. R.,

After walling about 20 minutes, Ed Roo after waiting about a initiate, ha its was introduced himself as the man she was waiting for. The lady sized him up and then appeared to be on the verge of fainting. She talked with him for a few minutes and, hurrying away, looked up Chief of Police Shearer, to whom she re-bated her story. Vetserday aftermoon lated her story. Yetserday afternoon she took the train back to her home, a sadder and possibly a wiser woman. "I saw the advertisement in a matriat the northwest corner of First and Ellsworth streets and will be ready monial paper." said Mrs. Stowell, as she tried to keep back the tears, "and I wrote to the address more in a spirit of fun than anything else. I have been a widow for six years, and thought if the man who had the ad was a nice one I would like to have company, for I am all alone. After corresponding for about six months, Mr. Root wrote me if I would come here he would meet me at Ashland. We were then to go to Seattle and, after getting married, see the fair, and return to live in Medford. I had the photograph he sent me in return for the one I sent him. I looked all around the depot at Ashland, but failed to see any one who looked like the picture. I then came on to Medford to look him up. After I had waited about 20 minutes at the depot, a man I had seen at Ashland approached me and introduced himself." "What did you think then?" she was asked. "For mercy's sake, don't ask me," was her reply. Root, dressed in his best suit of clothes. was at the depot when her train pulled out, but the lady apparently failed to look out of the window. Mrs. Stowell also stated that she had got everything ready for the wedding, and had two trunks full of things with her. Root is a poor, half-witted fellow, who hangs around town and does odd joba. He is said to have a college education, but was carried up some distance by a tornado and has not been right mentally since.
