After going after Bill Chenault like real champions in the opening inning yesterday afternoon and chasing two runs over Portland's doorstep, those Tacoma ball-players faded away to nothing and were beaten, 6 to 2. Chenault's Tennessee blood boiled when Coleman rapped out a double and the red around his gullet would have dimmed any crimson sunset the world has ever seen, when Fournier missed up Hurley's poke at the pan. The passed ball and a few other things that aided Tacoma in putting over the two runs did not leave his anger, so right there and then Bill Chenault decided he would serve Captain Hurley's men his famous no-hit balls during the rest of the week. He did.

Settled Down to Business.

When the handsome blond hurler from away south of the Mason and Dixon line shot them, after the alley after that, Chenault's doorstop, there was a haze of smoke that blinded Hurley's crew. Each ball he shot down the alley had the speed of a bullet after a coon lingering around the Chenault plantation. Any time a Tacoma man hit the ball he found an anxious Colt waiting to grab it. Conney and Kennedy pulled off a double which was thrown in for good measure. In order to win, the Colts had to come from behind. Adams and Conney were in the brim when Bassey poked one that both Catcher Pierce and Pitcher Hensling looked at and refused to molest. Bassey puffed second and came home on Kennedy's two-bagger. This made one. In the second round Fournier lammed out a two-bagger after Bassey and Conney had entered retirement. Chenault drove one that Macklin made a desperate stab at and missed, and while the ball was being retrieved, Fournier came home with the tying run.

Hensling held the Colts safe until the sixth inning. Kennedy hit safe and Garry punched one that bounded over Macklin's head. In a mad endeavor to nail Kennedy at second, Hensling threw the ball away, Garry going to second and Kennedy coming home. Crocker's kick past third scored Garry.

Oh, What a Mixture.

Passed balls, stolen bases, a base on balls and a sacrifice hit, together with a number of other things not intended for well regulated baseball were heaped upon the seventh inning. Bassey and Kennedy took advantage of the scramble and scored. Kennedy pulled off a daring steal. He stumbled and Crocker had entered retirement. Chenault drove one that Macklin made a desperate stab at and missed, and while the ball was being retrieved, Fournier came home with the tying run.

After watching Hensling pitch his team to defeat, Owner Schneider decided he would have the pitcher's salary raised for him when the game was over. Garibaldi was another player released. The score:
