

BIG POTATO CROP

Oregon Yield Is Estimated at 5000 Cars.

WEATHER CONDITIONS IDEAL

Extreme Prices of Last Year Are Not Expected to Be Repeated—Foreign Hop Crop Reports. Plenty of Fruit.

Unless weather conditions should be unusually bad in the fall, Oregon will produce this year the largest crop of potatoes in its history. Climatic conditions up to the present time have been ideal for a record crop, the wet summer giving the potatoes a growth they could not have received otherwise. Besides this, the average yield out was the largest in record, farmers being encouraged to plant more freely because of the high prices realized last season. Conservative authorities in the trade estimate that the Oregon potato crop this year will aggregate 5000 cars as compared with an average yield of 4000 cars.

The Washington crop from the best information obtainable, will show the same proportion of increase over last year as the Oregon crop, while Southern Idaho, it is said, will have a bumper yield.

California will have a large outturn of early potatoes, but the late crop will be under that of last year. It is not known yet what Colorado and the Northwestern States will produce, but it is believed they will have average yields.

From all indications now there will not be a repetition of the high prices of 1908, but dealers look for reasonably good market values—say around 15 cents—and because of the increased production, it should be a good year for the growers.

The Waterbury Times of July 23 says of the New York hop crop:

ACTIVE MARKET FOR OLD HOPS.

Speculators Buying Up All That Are Being Offered.

The features of the hop market in the active buying of spot hops, especially old Montana hops, in the past week, have secured over 1000 bales of old Montana hops and other dealers have made heavy purchases in this state. There is less doing in last year's crop, but there is also a good demand for that growth.

The contract market is practically untouched by reason of the stiffness of growers. The making rates have greatly benefited the hop vines hereabouts and they show a clean, healthy appearance. The earlier varieties are now in full bloom and unless something unforeseen occurs an average crop is promised. There is little or no complaint from the growers in the active buying of hops in the past week.
