FIRST: To buy your own tract, clear it, cultivate it, set out your trees, watch them carefully while growing, getting no profit for many years and risking the loss of your entire investment by lack of experience and knowledge in the business.

SECOND: Buy the land, let others clear it, cultivate it and plant the trees, then hire somebody, either on a salary or percentage, to bring the orchard to a producing point, entailing expense that is large and recollecting that first class fruit growers usually have orchards of their own and have no time to spend in developing others.

THIRD: Become part owner in an orchard long past the development stage and a profit producer for many years. Thus, you are assured of an income and know that the value of the land alone safeguards the investment.
