

UTLEY TESTIFIES IN SUTTON CASE

Naval Inquiry Resumes Sessions With Officers Appearing as Defendants.

BUT LITTLE NEW EVIDENCE

Latest Witness Is Not as Sure as Others of Suicide Theory and Says He Struggled to Get Sutton's Gun.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Aug. 5.—For five hours today Lieutenant Harold Utley, of the Marine Corps, was subjected to an exacting examination and cross-examination in regard to his connection with the death of Lieutenant James N. Sutton, of Oregon.

The hearing before the naval board of inquiry was resumed, after an adjournment the early part of last week, pending the arrival of Lieutenant Utley and Surgeon Frank C. Cook.

The new alignment in the proceedings, whereby five of Sutton's brother officers, who have already testified, and Lieutenant Utley appeared as defendants, accused by Mrs. Sutton, the dead boy's mother, and her daughter, Mrs. Parker, of causing Lieutenant Sutton's death, had no effect in curtailing the testimony in regard to his connection with the death of Lieutenant James N. Sutton, was absent.

Not Sure of Suicide.

While Utley said he was under the impression at the time of the shooting that Sutton, in the heat of the struggle with the other officers who were attempting to disarm him, directed the shot against himself, he was not nearly as positive about the suicide theory as the preceding witnesses.

Utley Disliked Sutton.

Mr. Davis got Utley to admit that he did not know Sutton in the Naval Academy before they joined the Marine Corps, and then wanted to know if Utley meant he had taken a dislike to Sutton merely on rumor, when he testified that he had disliked Sutton "as far back as academy days."

The witness said he had heard things about Sutton at that time that made him feel that he did not care to know him.

Utley Tells Story.

Following the line of questions to previous witnesses, Major Leonard led the young officer over the incidents of the night of October 12-13, 1907. Utley had been to a "hop" at the Naval Academy, and afterward went over to Carvel Hall Hotel with Lieutenants Adams and Osterman, where they met Lieutenant Sutton and later started with him to an automobile which Sutton never reached alive.

The witness described the altercation and the fight between Adams and Sutton on the "dunghill" near the camp, where Utley ordered the automobile to stop. As a senior officer of the party, the witness said he ordered the others to stop fighting and they did so at that time. Then Sutton and Osterman began fighting and Utley intervened and "untwisted" Osterman from Sutton, the witness said. Sutton got up and "knocked down" twice by Osterman, and then lay on the ground refusing to fight or say he had enough.

The fight was all one-sided, Osterman had the better of it from start to finish, said Utley. "Sutton lay on the ground refusing to get up and threatening to do so camp and get his gun," about their heads off before sunrise," the witness said. Utley said he told Sutton to consider himself under arrest and then left him and went to camp.

Sutton Was Armed.

Later on his rounds in camp he saw Lieutenant Roelker standing in front of Sutton's tent and Sutton just inside pointing a revolver at Roelker. Sutton and Roelker ran out of camp and Lieutenant Utley followed them down towards the parade grounds. "Sutton began shooting and Roelker pitched forward on his face and lay still," the witness said. Then he saw Adams loom up in front of Sutton and call out that he (Adams) was shot.

The shooting ceased and Adams closed in on Sutton and threw him face downward. The witness came up at this time, he said, and knelt on Sutton's shoulders to help hold him inside pointing a revolver at Roelker. Sutton and Roelker were both shot.

"You had better wait until tomorrow," said Utley. "No," said Mrs. Thaw, quickly recovering herself. "I can go on."

Mrs. Thaw said Harry accepted conditions at Mattheawan as something that could not be remedied, except having to go to bed at 8 P. M.

Thaw gave a graphic description of her visit to the second room her son occupied at Mattheawan. During the recital she had to stop twice covering her face and weeping. This time her other son, Josiah, mounted the stand and soothed her. Again Mr. Morschauer suggested that she continue the story tomorrow and again Mrs. Thaw refused. "I want to finish now," she declared.

On his return, Earl Grey will be the guest of British Columbia in the Windermere Valley, East Kootenay, where he will camp for several weeks, being joined there by Countess Grey.

WHITE'S LIFE IS LAID BARE

he said, "affected me very seriously at the time."

He described in detail the alleged experience of a girl, whom he said, who testified that after winning her confidence White lured the girl to his place on Twenty-fourth street, New York. The girl escaped through a lucky chance, he said, and later obtained a large sum of money from White under threat of a suit. After that, he continued, White had the girl boycotted so that for several years she could not play an engagement at any theater in New York.

Now Foremost Actress.

"This woman now," continued Thaw, "is one of the foremost actresses on the American stage."

Thaw gave the location of four places which he said White maintained for immoral purposes.

The aged Mrs. Thaw's appearance on the stand in her son's behalf was pathetic. Her feelings overcame her, but despite this she insisted on going on.

Other witnesses included two former teachers and a school friend of Thaw's who declared that he seemed perfectly normal when they knew him.

White's Letter to Girl.

David N. Carvalho, the handwriting expert, who sat by Thaw during the first trial, pronounced genuine 68 letters purporting to come from Stanford White, a letter alleged to have been written by White to a girl called "May" was admitted in evidence. It was dated April 11, and read as follows:

"I am the most awful fraud when it comes to letter writing. It is no use, I have what Peter Dooling calls 'synchopona,' and a bad case at that. I am glad you are having such a good time. A dose of hope after all is the best medicine any of us can take. Whatever you do, however, do not come back prettier or more alluring than you were, for under those circumstances I could not be responsible for my actions, and then there would be 'real trouble.'"

"By the way, when is that Fall boat going to sail? The social whirl has opened, and is really quite good. Seriously, when are you coming back? Lovingly."

Instead of a name, the letter was signed with what the witness declared was a hand opened, with what looked like porcupine quills extending from it. Mr. Jerome explained that this was Stanford White's regular signature in letters to his friends.

One of White's Victims.

Mr. Carvalho then took up the "Sue Parker" episode. He said a woman of this name made a sworn statement concerning alleged events between her and White. She produced a bundle of letters which she said White had written her and offered them for sale to Thaw's attorneys for $500. The letters were finally bought, the witness said, "with the understanding that the owner was to receive $50 more if they could be used at the first trial. The woman's affidavit," Mr. Carvalho said, described in detail how White had first met her when she was 17 years of age, and later taken her to a place known as "The Eagle's Nest."

Mr. Carvalho said, described in detail how White had first met her when she was 17 years of age, and later taken her to a place known as "The Eagle's Nest."

Edward Robinson, who had charge of the Foughkeepsie jail during Thaw's confinement there, testified that the prisoner and his wife had seemed to be friendly.

Mr. Morschauer then began the reading of old testimony to show Thaw's conduct and condition while in England and during his confinement in the Tombs.

Apparently forgetting that he was not a free man, Thaw suddenly left the courtroom with a sheet of paper in his hand. Two court officials overtook him in the corridor. "I must see Roger O'Mara at once," Thaw told them. O'Mara, who has acted as detective for the Thaw family, said the paper contained instructions.

Delmas' Fee Doubled.

Mrs. Mary Copley Thaw, mother of the prisoner, took the stand and told why her son dismissed Mr. Delmas, his chief counsel, in the first trial. Mr. Delmas was engaged mainly for the summing up, she said, and with that his work was done. Mrs. Thaw said Mr. Delmas was to have received $25,000, but got $50,000.

"Why?" asked Mr. Jerome. "Because Mr. Gleason came to my son and told him that Mr. Delmas would drop the case if he were not paid more."

Mrs. Thaw said she understood there was considerable quarreling among her son's counsel, but that Harry probably deemed it unwise to change lawyers in the midst of a trial.

Mrs. Thaw told for the second time the story of the death of her baby 14 months before Harry's birth, a fact that was brought out at the second trial as having prenatal effect.

"There is one thing I want to correct," she continued. "I said that Harry was a boy, but it was a girl, and I believed it until I talked with Dr. Adolph Meyer, who told me that disease was far more severe than the twitches affecting Harry."

The witness then related Harry's early history, which she illustrated by two baby photographs. This part of Mrs. Thaw's testimony minimized former allegations regarding Thaw's childhood. The mother admitted that Thaw was more nervous than most children of his age.

Mother Almost Breaks Down.

Twice during her testimony Mrs. Thaw seemed about to break down. The second time, Thaw mounted the stand, put his arm about her, patted her cheek and whispered in her ear. "You had better wait until tomorrow."

"No," said Mrs. Thaw, quickly recovering herself. "I can go on."
