COMPLETING HAWTHORNE TRACKS.—The Portland Ballway, Light & Power Com-pany is completing its new double track between East Third and East Forty-first streets, on Hawthorne avenue, preparatory to paving with a hard-surface improvement. It only remains to finish up the porth track, about three blocks remaining to be completed. Heavy steel rails have been laid on both tracks for the entire distance in solid concrete with stone blocks between the rails. At the highest point on the street, between East Twenty-sixth and Thirteenth streets, a considerable cut has been made lowering the grade several feet. Asphalt will be used on Hawthorne avenue, and the con-tracting company has started laying the concrete foundation cast of East Twelfth concrete foundation cast of East Twelfth street. Between East Twelfth and East Third there will be delay in laying the pavement until the eight-inch water main has been put down. A distinct novelty is presented by Senora Rosario Guerrero, aided by Signar L. Paglieri, in pantomime called "The Rose and the Dagger." In a little wordless drama they tell a story of the unruly passion of the South of Europe peoples which ends in a tragedy and incidentally gives the female star an opportunity to demonstrate exceptional ability as a Spanish dancer.

Our old friends, Murray and Mack, induge in what they term "A Harlem Argument," which proves to be a diverting ten minutes of typical Irish comedy tomfoolery. The audience received them with gusto and applauded their efforts enthusiastically, proving that this veteran team is still a popular card.

A first-rate symnastic act is offered by Spaulding and Riego, the comedian of the team, with his eccentric makeup keeping interest in the turn at the applauding point all of the time. Curistine LaBarraque, termed "the girl behind the veil," sings grand opera selections and ballads acceptably and Charles D. Weberdoes a stereotyped comedy juggling act.

The offering maintains a high average and is calculated to please amusement seekers.

Grand.

HUMOR and real entertainment ramscendency, comprise the offering at the Grand this week. The best act on the bill is Rinaldo, although the big type em-blazons the name of Bothwell Browne and company. The two may be said to vie for first honors. Rinaldo, who is a "wandering violinist" of unusual ability, captivates the house with his playing, his repertoire including Tobani's "Hungarlan Fantasie," a blending of "Annie Laurie" and "Killarney," and a medley "rag" of his own manufacture, which is irresistibly tuneful.

Bothwell Browne is not as Bostonian in actions as his-name would infer. He, with his excellent company, gives a farcical rendition of Antony's death and Cleopaira's snake dance. The iudicrous farcical rendition of Antony's death and Cleopaira's snake dance. The ludicrous blending of modern terms and customs, combined with the gorgeous Oriental splender of the stage setting and the garb of the participants in the farce is most startling. A note of interest is lent by the knowledge that the character of the snake, as performed by himself, is a truly live and remarkable exhibition. This act alone is one condensed bottle of mirth.

and present several coster songs and a character change. Among the best things on the programme are the monologue and songs by Will Morrissey, a comedian. His jokes are new, for which heaven, or the booking agent, be praised!

A tense dramalet with not one redeeming ray of humor is served up in exceptionally good style by Will S. Marian and Miss Vivi Rial. The piot is near psychic and is called "The Witch's Power."

In the present instance the adevitures of a country boy who has left the farm to try his fortunes in the city prove to be highly diverting and the actors who portray his various experiences are clever enough to make the story a lifelike representation of the things which are supposed to befall him. The feminine roles are capably taken by Clara Everett and Arline Shade, who are quite sufficient to the needs of the sketch.

A comedy playlet called "A Night With the Red Men." is introduced by Dorothy Lamb and her little company which is calculated to stir the risibilities of any audience. Buckley's trained dogs do some amazing things and fill in a large portion of the entertainment, while Irene Lee and her Candy Kid introduce songs and dances most successfully. Leo White sings an illustrated song and the pictures are fully up to the high Paninges standard.
