plains four years later and settled in the same county where he lived for 30 years. In 1877 the family moved to Eastern Oregon and took up their residence near Condon, where his father died in 1901, aged 72. In 1882 Dr. Lamberson located in Lebanon and took up the practice of medicine in partnership with Dr. D. W. Ballard, a Linn County pioneer physician. This partnership lasted until the death of Dr. Ballard in 1890. From that time Dr. Lamberson remained in the practice alone and built up a large and paying business. In 1902 he suffered a paralytic stroke which partly incapacitated him from active practice and from that time up to his death he followed office practice only, which he did up to two days before he died. The night of October 11, he suffered another stroke of paralysis from which he died two days later without regaining consciousness.
