POOL AGAINST COOK

Alaskans to Give $30,000 if He Proves Climb.

FAILURE MEANS FORFEIT

Dan S. Kain and Two Others, Believing Explorer Wrong, Devise Plan to Have Explorer Get Proofs With Party.

Dr. Cook may earn $30,000 and at the same time prove to the world that he actually reached the summit of Mount McKinley. If the tentative plans of Dan S. Kain, manager of the Central Alaska Hydraulic Mining Company, and other Alaskans materialize. In case, however, he accepts the proposition, planned to be made to him, he must lead other men to the top of the mountain and produce the proofs he says he deposited there, or pay $30,000 to the men who make the offer.

Mr. Kain, who arrived yesterday morning from Seattle where the tentative plan for making Cook the offer was agreed upon, declares that in his opinion Cook never reached the top of Mount McKinley, and he says the same belief is held by a great number of people in Alaska who have visited the mountain. Mr. Kain is registered at the Perkins Hotel.

Two weeks ago, Mr. Kain returned from Alaska, and since that time he and others have discussed Cook's claim excitedly. Just before he left Seattle to come to Portland, two of the wealthier Alaskans in Seattle, agreed with Mr. Kain that an offer of $30,000 should be made by all three to Cook to urge the explorer to make another trip to the summit of Mount McKinley, for proofs of his former ascent.

"I had to hurry away from Seattle before we completed our plans to make Cook the offer," said Kain yesterday, "but I am sure that one of the other men has already written to Cook concerning the matter."

"Who are the other men?" Kain was asked.

"There are reasons why I do not wish to give out their names at present," he replied, "but I can say with considerable certainty that we will make the offer as we have planned."

Kain gave various reasons for his belief that Cook never reached the top of Mount McKinley. Among them was the short time claimed to be taken by Cook to accomplish the feat.

"To climb a high mountain like that," said Kain, "a person must go slow, to let the lungs get accustomed to high altitude. I think a man could live but a very short time at the altitude of 22,000 feet if he reached it suddenly.

"Cook may have found the North Pole, I don't know anything about that, for I have never been there, but I have been twice to the base of Mount McKinley, and I am sure that Cook never climbed to the summit, as he claims. I hate to see a man go about the country claiming to have accomplished something he has never done, and that is the reason I am taking an interest in the matter."

"Our proposition to Cook will be to have him select one man for the trip, and for us to choose two. The four of them then can pick a fifth. We will pay half the expense of the trip, and Cook can pay the other half. We intend to deposit the money in a bank before the trip is begun, and if he leads the party to the peak on the top of the mountain, the $30,000 we deposit will be his. If he fails, the same amount, to be deposited by him, will be turned over to us."

William H. Holabird, generally known as the special representative of the executive department of the Harriman railroad system, arrived in Portland yesterday from Southern Oregon, where he has been on railroad business, the nature of which he refused to explain. He is staying at the Portland Hotel, and will leave in a few days for New York. His home is in Los Angeles.

It is generally known that during the life of the late E. H. Harriman, Mr. Holabird was his most confidential business associate. When Harriman wanted to know the value of a road and its worth as an investment or as a part of the great Harriman system, Mr. Holabird was the man detailed to investigate and submit a detailed report to the great railroad speculator.

When interviewed last night, Mr. Holabird admitted that he is still employed in the same class of work for the Harriman lines, but refused to divulge his errand to Oregon. When asked if there is any new railroad enterprise planned, of which he had information, Mr. Holabird said that he would not be permitted to tell of such a thing if such were the case.

"I can say this much," said Mr. Holabird, "I have unbounded confidence in Oregon and her resources, and it will be only a matter of time until Oregon gets what is due her."

Broken in spirit, sobbing piteously for his mother, and anything but the bold desperado he has been for the last month, Earl Higley, 18 years of age, lies in the City Jail awaiting trial on numerous charges of burglary. Higley has been hunted by the police of three states for the past four weeks, has committed robberies in Seattle, Tacoma, Everett, Portland, Los Angeles and other California cities for twice that time. Despite the strenuous efforts of the police he eluded capture until 10 o'clock yesterday morning.

Yesterday the boy, who was fleeing from the police of Los Angeles, returned to Portland, and within two hours from the police bureau of the train at the Union Depot he was pounced upon by Detective Craddock and placed under arrest. Craddock received a telephone message at 8 o'clock yesterday morning that the youthful criminal was in town, and he hastened at once on the trail of the boy. The informant, a stool pigeon, had made an appointment with the young burglar for 9:30 o'clock at East Burnside street and Union avenue. At that time Craddock was there and placed the young fellow under arrest.

Higley, when arrested, showed one flash of the nerve that has characterized him throughout his short career of crime. Detective Craddock walked on beside him, pressed his revolver to the lad's side, and ordered him to throw up his hands. Involuntarily the young thief did so, but then made a lunge for his revolver, only to be thrown back against the wall and partly stunned. Then he gave in, and an ugly-looking, fully-loaded revolver was taken from him by the detective.

At police headquarters the boy made a complete confession of the long list of crimes which he has committed. He broke down in the afternoon, began sobbing and crying for his mother, and told entirely the truth about the robbery which he had maintained all morning.

Higley is a Portland boy, known under the aliases of Hanley and "Ching Rice." He has lived here for a long time, and his mother now lives on Everett street, between Eleventh and Twelfth. He has a sunlit living at 1204 East Burnside street. He has served time in the Chehalis Reform School, as had all three of the lads with whom he has recently been associated in crime. He has not been around home for several months.

Valuables Found on Higley.

When arrested this morning Higley had loot on him valued at nearly $1000. There were four gold watches, six jeweled pins, 10 rings of various values, some jeweled with rubies or diamonds, a large cut opal, three ladies' watch-chains, a man's watch-chain, a handsome diamond stud and $17.15 in money. Some of this jewelry has already been identified as that stolen in various Portland residences, and the remainder the boy has confessed to stealing in Los Angeles, where he said he also stole the money. Detectives Craddock and Mallett have information which they believe will lead to finding the boy's suitcase today. In this they expect to find thousands of dollars' worth of loot stolen by the young burglar and his pals. In addition to the jewelry and money already mentioned, the boy had a $5 bill on the defunct Merchants and Planters' Bank. He says he does not know where he secured this.

Higley has been wanted by the local police for almost a year for different crimes. His work has at all times been spectacular and thorough, but his wholesale list of crimes did not start until October 8, 1909, when he robbed the house of H. C. Gertz, 419 Fremont street, of jewelry and clothing valued at $150. The same day he robbed the home of Charles E. Lillis, 407 Morris street, of jewelry valued at $200, and later the same after-

We will pay half the expense of the trip, and Cook can pay the other half. We intend to deposit the money in a bank before the trip is begun, and if he leads the party to the peak on the top of the mountain, the $30,000 we deposit will be his. If he fails, the same amount, to be deposited by him, will be turned over to us."

William H. Holabird, generally known as the special representative of the executive department of the Harriman railroad system, arrived in Portland yesterday from Southern Oregon, where he has been on railroad business, the nature of which he refused to explain. He is staying at the Portland Hotel, and will leave in a few days for New York. His home is in Los Angeles.

It is generally known that during the life of the late E. H. Harriman, Mr. Holabird was his most confidential business associate. When Harriman wanted to know the value of a road and its worth as an investment or as a part of the great Harriman system, Mr. Holabird was the man detailed to investigate and submit a detailed report to the great railroad speculator.

When interviewed last night, Mr. Holabird admitted that he is still employed in the same class of work for the Harriman lines, but refused to divulge his errand to Oregon. When asked if there is any new railroad enterprise planned, of which he had information, Mr. Holabird said that he would not be permitted to tell of such a thing if such were the case.

"I can say this much," said Mr. Holabird, "I have unbounded confidence in Oregon and her resources, and it will be only a matter of time until Oregon gets what is due her."
