

SCENES DRAMATIC IN STEINHEIL CASE

Actor Accuses Himself of Murders.

WOMAN CAN'T IDENTIFY HIM

He Admits Acting Merely on Chivalrous Impulse.

FAURE'S NAME INVOLVED

Madame Steinheil, With Air of Tragedy Queen, Adheres to Story of Murders, but Admits Love Affairs.

PARIS, Nov. 4.—Dramatic situations followed fast upon another in court today, where the trial of Mme. Marguerite Steinheil, accused of having murdered her husband and her step-mother, Mme. Japy, was continued. As on the opening day of the sensational case, Paris was wrought to a high tension over the promised disclosures. Mme. Steinheil was again on the stand, dressed in a mourning gown, a dramatic, though pathetic figure, fighting hard for life.

Accuses Himself of Crime.

M. Aubin read a letter signed "Jean Le Fevre," asking that he be permitted to confess, and then he pointed at the man and said, "This is Jean Le Fevre."

Mme. Steinheil gazed at him wearily, and after he had made a rambling statement, in which he declared as a woman and wearing a wig of red hair, he had helped commit the murders, she declared she could not identify him as one of the murderers whom she had previously described.
