ASTORIA, Or., Nov. 12—(Special.)—The high quality of the sliversides running in the Columbia River this Fall and es-pecially their excellent color, has led many to believe they are a cross between the regular sliverside and the Fall Chinook salmon. During the Winter of 1897 Wade Hampton Smith and Ole Paul-1897 Wade Hampton Smith and Ole Paul-sen erected a temporary hatchery at Fort Clatsop and treated the eggs of silver-sides with milt of the Fall chinooks. The fry thus obtained appeared to be healthy in every way, and after being held until they had passed the fingerling stage, they were released. This experi-ment showed that such a combination is possible, although scientists assert that the egg of this hybrid fish will not re-produce its species.

unique in construction, but brim full of ginger and sparkle.

John E. Young, whose local popularity is on record here since his appearance last year with "The Time, the Place and the Girl," was halled with delight by every one who remembered him in the other Harry Askin production, which memory still cherishes. He seems to have, if possible, increased his prowess as a two-disceptor, and sent continuous have, if possible, increased his prowess as a joy-dispenser, and sent continuous wireless messages of mirth across the row of footlights. His role is another edition of the Hicks he made famous, with the difference that in this instance he is a civil soldier of fortune, a Tammany type of politician, who pursues the even tenor of his way through an extremely simple plot, embellished with most intricate suggestions. This involves a tour of Yucatan, in the interests of anthropological research, the interest of said research having been changed from New York to the country where the chewing sum grows. This environment lends titelf ideally to the costumer and seenic artist.

The chorus is small—in numbers only—for some of the broilers are plump as Thanksgiving birds—and the costumes are a decided sensation. Beautiful in color scheme, they are decorative as well as effective. However, in the tropical scene the costumes of the Yucatan ladies are nothing much to speak of. The comedy lies entirely in the jokes and wittleisms in the lines, which are of the Gatling gun variety for spontaneity and rapidity.

Too, it is a riot of slang and omelette English. The musical numbers are all new and tuneful and it certainly leaves a taste that suggests passing your plate a second time. Besides Mr. Young, whose entrances

But comparisons are odious, and Dorothy just fits her niche exactly. Of especial beauty is the Astec temple meene, in which Juliette Langa, as Nicoya, the Injune loidy, sings delightfully "The Statue." With a chorus of enchanting blend of color and harmony.

The song hits, which include "Tammany on Parade." "Little Old Main Street," "Yankee Maid." "Lattle Things." "Statue Song" and "You Can Always Be My Sweetheart." are of the sort that stay in the memory and one finds oneself whist-
