JOHNSON CAUGHT AGAIN.—Despite rockpile sentence he dispenses liquors.

Police Slide Into Restaurant Door as Proprietor Lets Patrons Out. Evidence Gathered.

Edward Johnson, proprietor of the Delmonico Restaurant at 149 Seventh street, was arrested by Sergeant Kienlen and Patrolman Rancy and Burrow at 4 o'clock yesterday morning for violating the liquor ordinance. Johnson has no license, but was found serving drinks indiscriminately to a crowd of six people. The officers gained access to the place by waiting until some of the patrons departed and then darting in the door as Johnson opened it.

Although not having a license, Johnson has a large quantity of liquor stored in a room in the rear, and this was locked before the officers could reach it to seize some of it for evidence. The liquor on the tables was taken for evidence and will be shown in court. The names of the people found drinking in Johnson's place are A. L. Smith, 217 1/2 Second street; A. B. Brown, Cornelius Hotel; E. Murphy, Merchant's Hotel; Mrs. M. Smith, 19 Thirteenth street North; Miss Dorothy Hill, 20 1/2 Second street; Mrs. McArthur, Cornelius Hotel.

Johnson is said by the police to be the most persistent and flagrant violator of the liquor law in Portland. He has been arrested repeatedly by the police and at the present time is out on bail for $500. The police are determined to prevent his serving a sentence of 30 days on the rockpile given by Judge Bennett instead of a fine, on the ground that Johnson had paid his fines previously and flouted the police, and that a prison sentence would have a salutary effect.

Johnson's case will be tried in a few days before Judge Bennett.
