Keep Both Eyes Strong

Seldom are two eyes of equal strength. Yet, wherever there is inequality of visual power, wherever one eye does more work than its fellow, there also is eye-strain. And eye-strain slowly but surely and inevitably impairs the sight.

If you have reason to believe that one eye is stronger than the other, have them examined, and, if necessary, wear glasses-particularly for reading, sewing or other close work.

Good glasses will coax a poor eye into undertaking its share of the work of vision and relieving the good eye of its unfair burden, thus increasing the present working power and insuring the future usefulness of both.
