MARDI GRAS NOT MODEL

PORTLAND CAN PROFIT BY NEW ORLEANS MISTAKES.

Tawdry Finery and Grasping Hotel Policy Drive Visitors Away From City.

"The New Orleans Mardi Gras is a fairly good show, but it does not begin to compare with the pageantry of the Portland Rose Festival." This is the statement of Ira F. Powers, a prominent business man.

"The big electrical parades are perhaps a little longer than those which have been given here, but they are made up of old and tawdry paraphernalia that has been used for years past," said he. "Street decorations, down there, so far as I could see on our visit last month, looked as if they had been used many years."

Mardi Gras is an old institution and its promoters have been using their old floats year after year, and the dressing up of the streets and store fronts was shabby in the extreme. The people of New Orleans decorate elaborately, but it looks old. The business houses are using the same stuff that they have been displaying for many years and the effect is not particularly inviting.

"The hotels doubled their prices while we were there, and to make it all the worse, they wanted to put extra beds in our room. We stayed for only a part of the celebration, but thousands left in the height of it, just as we did. The outgoing trains, after the opening day, carried more people away from New Orleans than the incoming trains brought in.
